M'Carl's Ruling To Dismiss 900 From Treasury

Group Failed to Pass New Civil Service Examination.

Decision Sustains 'Patronage Rider'

Alcoholic Tax Unit to Lose Employes; Ansell to Contest Action.

The Treasury Department will drop some 900 employes over the country, formerly attached to the Prohibition Bureau, on December 1, it was announced yesterday after Comptroller General McCarl had sustained in part the McKellar "patronage rider" to the Treasury appropriation act.

The employes failed to pass a new test that was required of them under the rider, it was said. The test was given by the Civil Service Commission.

Most of the dismissals will occur throughout the States, only a few of the employes involved being stationed in Washington. The employes are assigned, chiefly as investigators, to the alcoholic tax unit of the Internal Revenue Bureau.

"Hoover Republicans."

While the rider was intended to oust about 700 former prohibition agents who, Senator McKellar (Democrat), of Tennessee, charged, were "Hoover Republicans," it actually is so broad that it affected several hundred employes whose service with the Federal Government has been continuous.

McCarl held that the legislation, however, does not affect the status of a large group of clerical and mechanical employes which Attorney General Homer S. Cummings ruled would be included.

A controversy, leading to the Comptroller General's decision, has been in progress for a year and a half or ever since President Roosevelt signed the reorganization order abolishing several governmental divisions and consolidating others. The Prohibition Bureau was one of those abolished.

About 500 of the prohibition agents were transferred immediately to the Division of Investigation of the Justice Department, and subsequently 700 who had been previously dropped were hired by the same unit, which later shifted the investigators to the new alcoholic tax division of the Treasury.

A fight against the new employment was launched on Capitol Hill, and charges were hurled that only Republicans had been rehired.

Ansell to Fight Ruling.

The rider, which subsequently passed, prohibited payment of any Treasury funds after December 1 to any employes dropped by the Justice Department between June 10 and December 31, 1933, and reappointed by the Treasury, until they had passed new tests.

Secretary Morgenthau, insisting that an efficient staff had been built up, asked for a ruling by the Attorney General, who not only upheld the law but insisted that it

Protest Brings Workman Fine

Whitney Rider, Accused of Abusing Judges After Race, Taxed $200.

Pimlico Race Track, Nov. 13.—Raymond (Sonny) Workman, Washington, D. C., jockey, was fined $200 after the second race here today "for conduct detrimental to the best interests of racing."

The veteran rider, who is under contract to C. V. Whitney, was incensed after the race when he learned the judges had placed his mount, Major General, second to Taunton. Passing the officials during the weighing out procedure, Workman is alleged to have used abusive language toward them. They promptly assessed the fine.

Major General, the favorite, and Taunton, an 8-1 shot, fought a see-saw battle for half of the mile and a sixteenth race. In the stretch, first one horse and then the other was ahead. Approaching the wire, Workman seemed to have a winning lead, but his mount suddenly slowed down as Taunton rushed forward. Workman apparently thought he had won until he glanced at the results board just before dismounting.

Four Children Killed As Oil Stove Explodes

Detroit, Nov. 13 (AP).—Four small children, their ages ranging from 4 weeks to five years, were burned to death this afternoon when an oil stove exploded in their home in suburban Inkster while they were alone.

Their father, Gus Wendt, was at work when the explosion occurred and their mother was out of the house momentarily. There was only one door to the four room, frame house and the fire which followed the explosion cut off escape.

Deputies Give Flandin a Vote Of Confidence

Chamber, by 423 to 118, Assures Premier of Its Support.

Paris, Nov. 13 (U.P.).—Faced with Premier Pierre-Etienne Flandin's blunt warning "We are making our last experiment in parliamentarism in France," members of the Chamber of Deputies tonight hurried into line to give his new "truce cabinet" an overwhelming vote of confidence.

The vote was 423 to 118.

Communists and Socialists dared vote against the powerful Flandin, who dominated the chamber from the moment he stepped into the auditorium and faced Parliament for the first time on his program of economic and constitutional reform.

The Republican-Socialists, Neo-Socialists and French-Socialists, all minor parties, abstained from voting. Radical-Socialists and other major party blocs voted solidly with the new cabinet, assuring Flandin's victory in his first test of strength.

Declaration of Policy.

Flandin, in his concise declaration of policy and demand for a vote of confidence, declared he was "firmly opposed to dictatorship—but to have peace aboard, we must have peace at home." He hoped "liberal institutions will win out over all forms of dictatorship," but left no doubt he was ready to enforce respect and support in the chamber, dissolving it, "if necessary."

Flandin's poll of 423 votes made the greatest confidence ballot given any cabinet in recent years. Sixty deputies abstained, chiefly Neo-Socialist, unwilling to vote against the political truce.

The Senate without a vote count overwhelmingly approved Flandin's ministerial declaration, particularly applauding his pronouncements of

Lead May Go To President In Navy Race

Move for Sole Power Seen if Ratios Are Abandoned.

Congress Appropriation Would Let Roosevelt Rule Building.

By Robert C. Albright.

Authority for the President to build at will in maintaining America's naval status may be asked of Congress, if international ratios are completely abandoned at London, it was learned last night. While no such provision has yet been written into the 1936 budget, it has been pointed out here that the White House already virtually has this much power.

Broadening of these powers, through an indeterminate appropriation, on which the President could draw if America's "second to none" naval objectives are seriously threatened, would be one way of meeting a threatened emergency, it was unofficially stated.

In passing the Vinson "treaty Navy" bill, Congress vested in the President probably the greatest peacetime naval construction weapon ever given one man. Until treaty parity is reached, he needs no fresh authority to build, although Congress still holds a grip on the purse strings.

As the Navy proceeded in haste toward the present goal of a treaty Navy by 1942, speculation hinged on whether a collapse in London negotiations would precipitate a change in plans, with the President assuming a vast new naval appropriating authority.

Cost Near Half Billion.

Meantime, an analysis of cost figures now on file with the House Appropriations Committee disclosed that a "treaty Navy" once attained will cost this Government a minimum of $458,925,000 a year to operate.

This sum would allow $100,000,000 for annual replacements, but would make no provision for modernization needs. It would be over and above the normal Navy departmental appropriation demands of about $4,000,000,000.

Estimates were made on the most favored of three naval construction programs under consideration, and call for rotating ships between a full and reserve commission status, with full overhauls during the reserve commission period.

The Navy would like to man these ships with 92,817 enlisted men, when the program is completed, on the basis of 90 per cent of the number needed to maintain them in full commission.

The department last year asked 85,000 men, in building toward this expected goal, but was forced to take less when the Budget Bureau and Congress protested. Needs since have been adjusted on a basis of an 85 per cent complement of men on the larger vessels, with the smaller ships fully manned.

"Strike While Iron Is Hot."

Navy officials insist the speeding-up process now under way, involving some $250,000,000 in construction expenditures this year, and at least $108,000,000 on 23 ships in the next, can be carried to completion without detriment to the quality of the work.

A survey of shipbuilding facilities showed the program can be expanded much further, without impairing construction, it was said. Without any enlargement of facilities, the department claims there are a total of 113 ways available in private and navy yards.

Urging the need for building now if this country is not to be outdistanced in the naval building race

Strike Ties Up Shipping At Port in Philippines

Cebu, P. I., Nov. 13 (AP).—Fifty inter-island steamships were tied up today when 1,000 sailors rejected a tentative settlement of their wage demands and walked out.

Seamen first struck November 2, demanding a 20 per cent wage increase and standardization of pay. A proffered 15 per cent increase was accepted by 50 officers who joined the first walkout, but was rejected by the sailors.

Bucky Harris Returns To Manage Griffmen; Gets Year's Contract

STANLEY "BUCKY" HARRIS.

(Sports Editor of The Post).

Stanley Raymond (Bucky) Harris, original boy manager of the Washington Club, yesterday was recalled to the scene of his former triumphs when Owner Clark Griffith appointed him pilot of the Nats.

Harris was signed to a one-year contract at an undisclosed figure, marking his return to the club which he led to its first pennant and world series triumph exactly a decade ago.

The appointment of Harris came as a repercussion of the $200,000 Joe Cronin deal last month which left the Washington club leaderless. Cronin was sold to the Boston Red Sox and the acquisition of Cronin ousted Harris from his post as manager of the Red Sox.

Claim for Tax Impertinence, Mellon Holds

Fight on U. S. Demand for Over $3,000,000 Goes to Appeals Board.

(Associated Press.)

Already cleared of criminal charges, Andrew W. Mellon yesterday made a counterattack upon the Government's contention in a civil case that he is $2,000,000 behind on his income tax for 1931.

"Impertinent, scandalous and improper," was the description he made to the board of tax appeals of the Government's allegation that in addition to the $647,559 Mellon paid for 1931, he still owes $2,050,068. A penalty of half that makes the Treasury claim more than $3,000,000.

The former Secretary of the Treasury and Ambassador to Great Britain frankly acknowledged his great wealth in the petition, but insisted his resulting large number of clerical employes guaranteed accuracy of tax returns.

Claim Increased.

The Government, carrying out its drive against allegedly delinquent income tax payers, two months ago not only charged Mellon with fraud but increased to the $3,000,000 figure the amount it contended Mellon owed. The first letter, written in March, 1934, and claiming back taxes for 1931, said the deficiency was $1,319,080 with a penalty of $659,540.

Rickenbacker Sets a Record Flying South

But Reaches Capital on Trip Back 3½ Hours Behind Schedule.

Three hours and 35 minutes behind schedule, the giant silver monoplane carry Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker, 2 pilots and 14 passengers on an attempted dawn-to-dusk flight from New York to Miami and return, bounced gently to the ground at Washington Airport at 9:56 p. m. last night.

Hastily refueled for the last leg, the Florida Flier set its shiny nose north at 10:14 p. m. Capt. Rickenbacker announced during the 18-minute stop that he hoped to make the Newark field, home airport of the flight, by 11:15 p. m.

Cross winds and inadequate service facilities at the various landing fields had rolled up the steadily mounting time-deficit in the record attempt, Capt. Rickenbacker said.

The famous flier's plan of a New York breakfast, a Miami luncheon and a New York dinner was nearing either defeat or a cold dinner.

Roosevelt's Optimism Extolled by Cardinal

Archbishop of Boston Lauds President After Visit; Receives Highest Honor Tonight in Golden Jubilee Celebration.

William Cardinal O'Connell, Archbishop of Boston and dean of the American Hierarchy, called on President Roosevelt yesterday and found him "hopeful about things" and "cheeriness itself."

The 75-year-old prelate, who tonight will be honored at Catholic University on the fiftieth anniversary of his ordination as a priest, described his call as an informal, friendly visit.

"We had a good long talk," he told reporters, "but also a good hearty laugh.

"I am wondering how he keeps so well with the tremendous stress of work on his shoulders while he is cheeriness itself. He talked about world conditions. Everybody knows that things are not as bright as they might be.

"But he is hopeful about things. He thinks that little by little things are getting better. It is good for him to feel that way.

"I do not see how any one can think differently from him. I believe that the psychology of the country is better and that he has made it better.

"The people have behaved wonderfully. There has been great suffering and many who were once rich are now poor. But see how orderly things are. We do not have any popular uprisings in this country like those you see elsewhere.

"One reason for that is the great confidence people have in their own Government and its legal processes—in the President and in Congress.

"The people are hoping that things will get better, and they are willing to wait until they do get better. I think this is a tremendous eulogy of the American people.

"There is plenty of reason to be out of patience, but they have not got out of patience.

"Little by little money is coming out and is being put to use. That is

Teacher 'Fired' in Flag Fight Holds School, Defying Ouster

Syracuse, N. Y., Nov. 13 (AP).—Esther De Lee, 21, pretty brunette teacher, "fired" last week by a rural trustee who said she would not display the American flag where he ordered it to be hung, held the fort today in her 12-pupil school in Pompey Hollow, determined to continue teaching "until I am evicted by State police."

James M. Armstrong, the trustee, called first the Canastotta substation, then the Oneida Barracks of Troop D, State police, and waited for the officers to arrive.

Meanwhile, Capt. Stephen McGrath, commandant at Oneida, said: "We'll not send troopers down there unless we get orders from Albany."

Capt. George P. Dutton, State police adjutant at Albany, asserted he had received no communication from the captain and had given no order.

"We probably will," he added, "but if we do receive a request, the matter is such a delicate one that we probably will go first to Attorney General Bennet for advice."

The State education department said no communication had come to it from Miss De Lee and until then "it is entirely a matter for the local officials."

"It is Mr. Armstrong's prerogative to call the State police and have Miss De Lee forcibly removed from the class room, if it is necessary," it was said.

Armstrong wrote Dr. Frank P. Graves, State commissioner of education, Thursday. He charged Miss De Lee had removed a large flag from an alcove entrance at the

Distelhurst Kidnap Hunt Yields Body

Remains of Small Girl Are Unearthed at Nashville.

Police Seeking to Decide if It Is That of Publisher's Child.

Nashville, Tenn., Nov. 13 (AP).—Finding of the unclad body of a little girl in a shallow grave here late today led officers to move swiftly to determine if the body is that of missing Dorothy Ann Distelhurst.

In New York, where Alfred E. Distelhurst, father of the missing 6-year-old kindergarten pupil, went last week in the hope of meeting persons who asked $5,000 ransom, W. L. Hamilton, an uncle of the child, said:

Little Dorothy Ann disappeared while walking home from kindergarten September 19 through a sparsely settled section of East Nashville.

Kidnapers Elude Search.

When she failed to return home at the usual hour a search was begun. Within a few hours the entire countryside in that part of Nashville was combed by hundreds of police, citizens and county officers on the theory that perhaps she had been attacked, slain and her body hidden.

Subsequent hunts failed to develop any clues as to what happened to the child and the belief arose that she had been kidnaped. Her father maintained his belief in the kidnaping theory.

The body was badly decomposed. It was taken to a mortuary and several hours later there had been no positive identification.

Pat Beard, a close friend of the Distelhurst family, after viewing the body said it was "the right size" to be that of Dorothy Ann.

Mrs. Dave Rice, Dorothy Ann's kindergarten teacher and one of the last persons to see her before she vanished, went to the mortuary and expressed the belief she could make the identification if it was possible to do so. However, there were indications that she might not view the body unless some identification marks could be established.

U. S. Takes a Hand.

Beard said "the color of the hair is very close." He said he could not make a positive identification because "I didn't know her well enough." Beard works with Distelhurst in a publishing house here.

Mrs. Distelhurst, Dorothy Ann's mother, and other members of the family were at their home here. They were not informed several hours after the body had been found but Beard said he might tell the mother that an investigation was under way to determine the girl's identity.

Federal agents took a hand. W. A. Rorer, chief of the Nashville office of the Department of Justice, called J. Edgar Hoover, head of the department at Washington, to report that so far no identification had been made and that even the sex had not been determined.

After a brief examination, Dr. Herman Spitz, acting coroner's physician, was quoted by District Attorney General J. Carlton Loser, who assumed charge of the investigation, as saying the child appeared to weigh about 75 pounds and was about 9 years old.

Loser, asked if this description would eliminate the theory that the body was that of the Distelhurst child, replied: "Yes, of course, if that is true, it will."

32 Soldiers Saw U. S. Gold Moved Safely to Denver

Thirty-two soldiers kept robbers away during recent shipment of $2,300,000,000 worth of gold from the San Francisco mint to the Denver mint, Postmaster General Farley revealed yesterday.

The transfer was not without incident, however, Farley reported, because a Railway Mail Service clerk suffered a toe injury when a pouch containing a gold bar fell on his foot.

Chest Pledges At $380,609, Gain Over '33

Governmental Unit Still Leads With $68,020 Obtained in Day.

Two days' campaign found the Community Chest yesterday with $380,609.54 in its coffers attesting the generosity of Washington.

Maj. Gen. Frederick W. Coleman's Governmental unit again led the way. This unit obtained $68,020.69 yesterday which, added to Monday's score, gives it 35 per cent of its quota.

The chest as a whole has obtained 22.71 per cent of the quota of $1,675,000, and is running slightly ahead of par for the ten days of the drive.

The meeting at the Willard yesterday was the largest in the history of the chest. Aside from reports, the only talk was made by Herbert N. Willett, director, who urged workers to continue their good efforts.

$8.39 U. S. Clerks' Average.

The Governmental Unit, which is setting the pace and swamping auditors with baskets of pledge cards, is securing an average gift of $8.39 from Government workers.

The second day's reports showed that the Group Solicitation Unit has added $21,066.21, making a total of 10.7 per cent of its quota. Walter B. Clarkson leads this unit.

The Metropolitan Unit, headed by Joseph D. Kaufman, exceeded its first day's results, getting $24,690.50. This unit now has 16.4 per cent of its quota.

Pledges secured by the Special Gifts Unit, headed by Charles Carroll Morgan, were $28,090 on the second day. This unit now has 19.9 per cent of its quota.

'So Ready or Not, Here I Come,' Shrieks Winter Ahead of Time

Winter blew its icy breath up and down the Eastern Seaboard yesterday, from Maine to Florida.

In Washington the mercury dived to its lowest autumn reading—31 degrees at 2 a. m. The high here yesterday was 51, recorded at 4:30 p. m.

The Weather Bureau predicted today would be fair and colder, with fresh northwest winds sweeping the city.

Frost appeared in low areas in Rock Creek Park, and in the suburbs. The winds yesterday were stinging and chill, and from the west.

The Atlantic seaboard and parts of the Midwest yesterday turned up overcoat collars and headed into winter weather.

Snows, chilling drizzles and freezing temperatures spotted the territory and lashing winds whipped up waves on the Great Lakes, according to the Associated Press.

A freighter, Poplarbay, unreported on the Great Lakes since Saturday, when it left Port Huron for Chicago and at first believed lost, was reported safe at anchorage off Mackinac Island.

Storms off the Atlantic coast delayed ocean shipping.

Mercury readings of 20 degrees or lower spotted the Atlantic seaboard and South. Snow fell in New York throughout the day; there was an inch of snow in western Pennsylvania, another snowfall at Buffalo, and flurries fell in Chicago and its suburbs, Milwaukee and South Bend, Ind. Eastern Pennsylvania and New Jersey had snow flurries and sleet.

Temperature recordings showed lows of 36 at Pittsburgh, 40 in Little Rock, 42 in Memphis, 38 at Atlanta, 26 in Athens, Ga., and 40 in Chicago.

Private Agencies Can Now Take Over Job, Says Fahey.

Number on Hand To Exhaust Fund

Suspension of Loans Seen as Approach to Recovery.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Suspension of the receipt of additional applications for home mortgage refinancing by the Home Owners Loan Corporation yesterday was regarded as the beginning of a movement toward the liquidation of some of the "New Deal" emergency agencies and a step toward normal.

Announcing no further applications would be received, John H. Fahey, chairman of the agency, pointed out "there is steadily increasing evidence that a large proportion of the private lending agencies of the country are now getting in position to resume their normal lending functions and to handle refinancing of mortgages."

"A great many of the applications being filed with us can and should be taken care of by the private lending institutions," he added.

$1,200,000,000 on Hand.

"The HOLC still has $1,200,000,000 of its $3,000,000,000 fund authorized by Congress. Mr. Fahey pointed out that applications now in hand were far in excess of the resources of the corporation. He estimated this sum would take care of about 400,000 of the pending applications and the fund would be completely exhausted by late February or March.

Although the HOLC avoided questions as to whether new funds would be asked of Congress, explaining that the answer depended on developments within the next few months, it was intimated at the White House that an increase in the agency's borrowing authorization was not contemplated.

Progress to Recovery.

In this connection there was recalled President Roosevelt's statement several weeks ago to the American Bankers Association that the Government would withdraw lending functions when private enterprise demonstrated its ability to carry on the task.

The decision to shut the door against further applications for home loans was taken as an indication that the President feels the home mortgage situation had progressed to a point where it is no longer necessary for the Federal Government to pour billions of dollars to prevent the loss of homes.

Gas War Ends; 4-Cent Increase

Conclusion of Month-Old Fight Held Victory for Independents.

Washington's month-old gas war ends this morning with major distributors taking the lead in jumping retail prices 4 cents. One cent of this is a partial restoration of the reduction in the dealers' margin of profit.

Before closing tonight, the majority of independent dealers will boost their prices accordingly, it was expected, bringing the cost of fuel to District motorists to 18.5 cents at stations selling branded gasoline, 14.5 at unbranded stations.

The agreement ending the battle was viewed generally as a victory for the independents, for they have insisted upon a difference of 1 cent between their prices and those of the major companies throughout the long series of price slashes that marked one of the most bitter trade wars in the Capital's history.

The first break in the war, which had involved the District and 18 States of the Atlantic seaboard, came yesterday as Virginia dealers returned prices to normal.

Today's prices represent a cent reduction from charges prevailing here before the war began October 11, a cut the industry describes as seasonal.

Move to Limit Arms Traffic Pressed by U. S.

Plan Will Be Suggested at Geneva Conference on November 21.

Out of the rapidly collapsing efforts for world-wide disarmament, the United States hopes to bring about an universal agreement providing for the supervision of the manufacture and traffic in munitions and has launched a drive to that end, it was revealed yesterday by the State Department.

Realizing the difficulties of attaining an agreement on general disarmament at present, this Government has assumed the leadership in appealing to the munitions manufacturing nations to enter into a pact to require the licensing of all makers of arms as well as their export shipments and to subject such activities as are permitted to the full glare of publicity.

The United States would have the world powers proceed along this line without waiting until a general disarmament treaty can be arranged. The plan is to push this proposal when the "bureau" or steering committee of the disarmament conference meets at Geneva on November 21 and to have the conference concentrate on this phase of the problem at its January meeting.

Hugh R. Wilson, American Minister to Switzerland and the State Department's disarmament expert, is now engaged in sounding out the attitude of other major powers toward the proposal. It was revealed on Monday that he had discussed this subject with Tsuneo Matsudaira, Japanese Ambassador at London. It also was learned yesterday that he had approached representatives of the British, French and Italian foreign offices.

Licenses Recommended.

The details of the American proposal remain secret but it was made clear that this government stands ready to go far beyond its offer of last spring for the control of the munitions traffic. In an effort to bring the manufacture of arms under control, this government favors a provision requiring licenses, not only for general operation, but for each specific order.

Thus if such a treaty became effective American munitions makers could not build up stocks without permission of the Government. If, under such a system, an American concern received an order for 50 airplanes or guns from a Latin-American or an Asiatic country it could not proceed with the manufacture of those implements of war until licensed by this Government to do so.

Should each munitions-making nation in the world agree to hold such checks over its manufacturers, governments could not plead impotency when called on for concerted action to put a stop to warfare such as the Gran Chaco slaughter by cutting off supplies.

Disclosure of the new American plan was coincident with the return to the city of Secretary of State Cordell Hull, who has been undergoing treatment at Pinehurst for laryngitis. He appeared much improved and discussed with the President developments in the naval conversations and other aspects of foreign relations.

There is a feeling of hopelessness at the State department over the deadlock in the naval talks caused by Japan's insistence on fleet equality. Reports from London that outstanding Britishers are demanding that their Government should stand with the United States, however, have caused some cheer.

The decision to strike out for a pact for supervision of the arms traffic is only remotely related to the London naval conversations. The question came to the front at this time because the Disarmament Conference steering committee is scheduled to meet later this month and because this government believes, in view of the Nye Committee revelations, public opinion in this country favors such action, it was explained.

President Roosevelt last spring launched the movement which gave impetus to the plans for an investigation of the munitions industry. Indorsing that inquiry, he called for ratification of the Geneva treaty of 1925 for supervision of international trade in arms; adoption of a resolution empowering him to embargo arms shipments to the Gran Chaco and demanded that further efforts be made for an international agreement for supervision of munitions.

The Senate promptly ratified the Geneva treaty, which had been pigeonholed for nine years, but in doing so attached a reservation providing that adherence to the treaty "shall not be construed as denying any right or sovereignty which Persia may have in or to the Persian Gulf or to the waters thereof."

This reservation is known to have disturbed the State Department, but whether it is responsible for President Roosevelt's failure to promulgate this country's ratification of the treaty is not known. At all events, the pact remains ineffective, without completion of this country's ratification and with half a dozen other nations making their ratification conditional on similar action by this country.

Between You and Me

Wide Significance Placed Upon Visit of Roosevelt to Tennessee Valley.

By Raymond Clapper

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S trip through the Tennessee Valley beginning tomorrow is much more than a sightseeing excursion. It is an attempt to dramatize forcibly in the public eye one of the monumental undertakings of the New Deal. Mr. Roosevelt envisages similar undertakings, modified to meet difficult conditions in other regions, notably the St. Lawrence, and the Columbia River in the Far West.

This means that the battle with public utilities, which has been carried on in the Tennessee Valley, shortly will spread to a much wider front. That is why Mr. Roosevelt is so determined to have the St. Lawrence treaty ratified. It is essential that this be done in order to clear the way for the development of a cheap power program in New York State.

Mr. Roosevelt will advance this aspect of the St. Lawrence treaty question when the fight is renewed in the Senate next winter. It was not stressed in the unsuccessful attempt at ratification last winter. One reason was that Mr. Roosevelt was not in a position at that time to unfold his full program. It was not a good time politically to do it because the New Deal had so many other experiments under way that it was not desirable to challenge a new source of opposition by pressing the power fight, and with a congressional election coming on. The other reason was that certain studies had not been completed.

Within the last few days the path has been cleared. The elections have given Mr. Roosevelt a new grip on his already tremendous power. And the two-year survey of the New York State Power Authority has been completed, providing detailed data with which to argue the case.

This report will serve now as the Administration Bible in the power fight which is entering its opening stages. It was presented by Chairman Frank P. Walsh of the New York State Power Authority. Electric rates throughout the Northeast area are analyzed and the report concludes that they are far too high. Greater savings, it was stated, would be effected if the utilities were publicly owned.

As indicative of the attitude of the White House, it was emphasized that this study was made by the New York State Power Authority under orders given by Mr. Roosevelt three years ago, when he was Governor of New York, and that it was carried out without effective cooperation from private companies who, after considerable delay, furnished meager data but in such form as to be useless.

* * * *

This document, issued from the White House with a covering statement so that it would be given maximum Nation-wide attention, and barbed with thrusts at private utilities, will be viewed by those who stop to consider the circumstances as the Administration's White Paper in its war for public ownership of hydro-electric power. It lays the foundation for the attack on the rate structure of the private utilities and is a direct challenge to the powerful Niagara-Hudson interests headed up by the Morgan House.

Mr. Roosevelt's tour through the Tennessee Valley dramatizes the social aspects of that experiment. It will permit the country to see through his eyes what has been done by way of improving the standard of living of the average man through cheap electricity, and how the life of a small locality like Tupelo, Miss., has been fundamentally affected by low-priced current.

These are all signs of an approaching extension of the New Deal which will arouse forces of opposition for more powerful, more compactly organized, and more entrenched behind heavy investment, than any of the opposition challenged hitherto by other phases of the Roosevelt program. The Administration is strengthened in its position by overwhelming majorities for municipal ownership in a number of cities, particularly in the Tennessee Valley, registered at the last election. It is now beginning skillfully to stir sentiment nationally behind its impending program.

All of this no doubt is bewildering to those who have inferred that because Mr. Roosevelt and numerous of his Administration assistants recently have reaffirmed their belief in private profits, the New Deal suddenly had become conservative.

There is no indication whatever that Mr. Roosevelt has altered in the slightest the philosophy which he expounded in his now famous Commonwealth Club speech at San Francisco in the summer of 1932, when he was a candidate for President. It would pay anyone to read that address over again, for there he has laid down the broad conditions under which he believes the More Abundant Life must be achieved. That address was couched in broad general terms. It did not bind him as to detailed mechanisms for achieving those objectives.

Nothing indicates that Mr. Roosevelt is abandoning the New Deal or altering its purposes. Only methods of achieving the objectives are modified. In the light of this it is questionable whether Mr. Roosevelt, as some have suggested, will soon become the rallying point of the conservative forces against a more radical left wing. There is yet plenty of room left to the Republicans to occupy a progressive position somewhat to the right of Mr. Roosevelt. Indeed, unless we are prepared to see the utilities owners, the bankers and the entire capitalist and investing class switch over to public ownership, the rise of a strong opposition on the right is inevitable, and if the Republican Party does not provide the leadership for it then some other group, such as the American Liberty League, will.

On election night a woman whose early home had been in Pennsylvania was visiting in Boston. She telephoned the Boston Herald several times to ask about the election. Each time the Herald office answered by saying: "Bacon defeated." After going through this experience several times, the lady, who is an exceptionally determined person, finally got in a word.

"I particularly wanted to know what happened in Pennsylvania," she said.

"Sorry," replied the Herald man, "but we haven't heard from the outlying districts yet."

Sir Frederick White Proposes Japanese Curb

Cooperation between this country and Great Britain as a means of curbing the aspirations of Japan was proposed yesterday by Sir Frederick White, an old acquaintance of President Roosevelt, after a call at the White House.

"The Japanese are trying their best to make the rest of the world forget what they did in 1931," the Britisher declared. "Unless you on this side, and we on the other, get together on something, they will slaughter us separately—and without ever going to war."

Sir Frederick recalled that he first met the President when he served as Assistant Secretary of the Navy during the War. The acquaintance was revived 14 years later and he has discussed foreign affairs with him on one or two occasions since.

Sheriff Sentenced In Contempt Case

Refusal to Count Absentee Votes Angers Judge.

Fort Payne, Ala., Nov. 13 (AP).—Sheriff S. W. Pope, of Dekalb County, was sentenced to jail for an indefinite term and fined $50 by Judge A. E. Hawkins here today for contempt of court. It was charged he ignored a court order against interfering with ballots cast in the November 6 election.

Judge Hawkins ordered Pope to be kept in jail "until he has complied with the court order," which instructed him to count absentee ballots.

Democrats claimed 239 of 241 absentee votes thrown out, and victory for their entire ticket with these votes tabulated. Republicans showed a slight majority for all but one county office without the absentee votes.

Exchange Curb Lifted to Hold Dollar Steady

Treasury's Aim to Discard Manipulation Is Read in New Move.

While the Treasury is letting its action in lifting foreign exchange restrictions speak for itself, it was made clear yesterday that the step is of large importance in signifying that the Administration desires to hold the dollar steady and does not contemplate any change in gold content.

Undersecretary of the Treasury T. Jefferson Coolidge, on whose initiative the red tape was removed, acted after consultation with the newly appointed governor of the Federal Reserve Board, Marriner S. Eccles, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury at the time of his appointment to the governorship.

The new move does away with the previous system requiring application for licenses covering exchange transactions. While, as Undersecretary Coolidge explained, it does not represent a change in policy, the inference was at once drawn and not denied yesterday by the Treasury that this change of procedure betokens the evident but unproclaimed intention to discard further monetary manipulation.

Outflow of Capital.

Responsible authorities agreed that had a further cut in the gold content of the dollar been contemplated, the Administration would not have let down the barriers to the outflow of capital which would be expected to result from such an action.

Precisely what the immediate effect of the step would be is a matter of conjecture among officials. Mr. Coolidge looks for no marked effect at once. However, the removal of irritating red tape, which has made for delay, would presumably stimulate exchange activity.

The prevailing opinion is that the implications of orthodoxy would be likely to induce an inflow of funds. On the other hand, taking note of a seasonal balance of international payments running in this direction, some observers felt that the effect might be to provide an offset by facilitating outward movements.

A Move to Orthodoxy.

But beyond the immediate effects, the assumption was general and supported by unofficial Treasury views that the change in procedure, not in policy, heralds the policy itself, which is more clearly than ever seen to be in the direction of steadiness and orthodoxy.

Experience long since persuaded the Administration that the less said about "dollar" policy the better, inasmuch as dangerous economic and political explosions can so easily be touched off by words. Thus the disposition now is to let actions or abstention from action speak for themselves.

If the Administration were desirous of adding further encouragement to business to get up headway before Congress convenes, the new move would be in order. It was taken as such a signal in most financial quarters both here and abroad.

University of Georgia Plans $2,800,000 Unit

Philip Weltner, chairman of the Georgia Board of Regents, announced last night bids will be asked immediately for construction of new buildings and improvements involving $2,800,000 at 14 institutions of the Georgia University system, the Associated Press said.

After a conference with officials of the Public Works Administration, which is putting up the money in a loan and grant, Weltner said "we were told to go ahead and get into action, so we are going at it."

JUSTICE LOUIS D. BRANDEIS.

Justice Marks 78th Birthday

Brandeis, Oldest Supreme Court Member, Spends Day at Work.

Justice Louis Dembitz Brandeis, outstanding liberal and oldest member of the United States Supreme Court, passed his seventy-eighth birthday yesterday at work on the court's heavy docket.

Already eight years past the retirement age, Justice Brandeis, still in vigorous health, prefers to remain at the duties assiged him by President Wilson 18 years ago.

Friends dropped by his office to felicitate him and his desk was littered with messages of congratulation.

Once famous for his dissenting opinions, Justice Brandeis now is a member of an apparently liberal majority. Conservatives do the dissenting. Friends say he has lost none of his old incisiveness in getting to the heart of an issue.

Elisha Hanson May Ask End Of Press Codes

Denies Labor Board Should Act in California Dispute.

(Associated Press.)

An assertion that all newspapers might be advised to withdraw from NRA codes if the Labor Relations Board accepted jurisdiction in a dispute between the San Francisco Call-Bulletin and one of its former employes was expressed yesterday.

The complaint was brought before the board by Dean Jennings, who said he was forced to resign his position as the Call-Bulletin's chief rewrite man because of activities with the newspaper guild.

Hanson, who also is counsel for the American Newspaper Publishers Association, held the dispute was one which should be handled by the newspaper industrial board, the code authority.

Alexander Lindey, speaking for the guild, contended the Labor Relations Board was given authority to treat with such cases by the law establishing it, enacted by Congress last spring.

The hearing was closed, but subsequently Hanson gave this version of the hearing to newspapermen:

"I was asked what would happen if the board issued an order in this case. I said that Mr. (William Randolph) Hearst (owner of the paper), would not comply with it.

"I was asked if I was authorized to state the position of Mr. Hearst. I said his position was that if the code was meaningless insofar as the Government was concerned, it was meaningless insofar as he was concerned.

"I was asked what position the A. N. P. A., the five regional associations and the code authority would take. I replied that I was not authorized to speak for those.

"But I added that if the board asserted jurisdiction, I would be called upon for advice, and I would then say that if the Government violated the code my clients should notify the Government and liquidate the code immediately. Then it would be left to the election of individual newspapers as to what they would do."

Jonathan Eddy, the guild's executive secretary, said that Jennings would have been discharged if he had not resigned. Jennings had asked to have his vacation at a specified time so, as a delegate, he could attend a guild convention.

Borah Moves Relief Ousters On Vote Charge

Fish Alleges 11 'Coerced' Needy to Support Democrats.

(Associated Press.)

To Senator Borah's charges of "shameless waste" in relief fund disbursements was added yesterday a demand that eleven Federal relief workers who allegedly intimidated voters just before the election be removed.

Borah, Independent Idaho Republican, conferred yesterday with a special investigator set by Harry L. Hopkins, relief administrator, on the trail of the "waste", the Senator reported.

After that conference, Borah said he thought there would be no differences between the investigator, "Mr. Hopkins and myself in the matter."

Revealed by Fish.

Shortly thereafter, Representative Fish (Republican), New York, made public a letter to Hopkins calling his attention "to a most flagrant and brazen attempt to intimidate the needy voters receiving Federal relief in Putnam County, New York, which is in my congressional district."

Fish continued:

"An amazing campaign letter was sent out to the unemployed and needy voters of my own county signed by 11 Federal relief workers, which stated in part that 'your very existence is at stake. You can save a job for yourself and make jobs for your relatives or friends only by going to the polls on November 6 and supporting all Democratic candidates. * * * All Republican candidates are against the Democratic program, which has helped you, and which will help you more. Vote the straight Democratic ticket on Election Day and save your job.'

Coercion Charge.

"In all my political experience * * * I have never known of such a contemptible or un-American act, which amounts to coercion, duress and intimidation of the voters receiving Federal relief. Political corruption is bad enough to contend with, but intimidation of destitute and needy Americans and the playing of partisan politics with human misery through use of Government relief is a political fraud of the grossest character and can not be condoned."

He also said he felt confident that Hopkins "will use every influence at your command to help in exposing those higher up who instigated this dastardly abuse of relief funds for political purposes."

Borah Considers Relief Problem

covered several hundred other employes transferred from the Justice Department.

Subsequently, on an appeal from Morgenthau, Cummings held that all employes who had been transferred without a break in service would not have to take the examination.

McCarl, however, ruled that both classes of employes were affected and that the 500 who were transferred at once were automatically separated from the Federal service when the Prohibition Bureau was abolished.

Samuel T. Ansell, who fought the "patronage rider" throughout in behalf of the employes affected, said he would take legal steps to set aside McCarl's decision.

Bonus Group Protests MacArthur's Retention

Letters protesting against possible reappointment of Gen. Douglas MacArthur as Army chief of staff were sent to President Roosevelt and Secretary Dern yesterday by the bonus army rank and file committee.

The letters were signed by James Eaton, Harold Hickerson and Louis Wittenborn. They charged MacArthur "on July 20, 1932, led the Federal troops in a dastardly move against veterans peacefully assembled for the collection of their back wages."

As an alternative the veterans proposed election of the chief of staff by the Army enlisted personnel.

Indianan Kills Wife, 16, Self

Slays Estranged Bride as She Is Returning From School.

Medora, Ind., Nov. 13 (AP).—A high school girl's romance and secret marriage culminated in a double tragedy here today when Muriel Hunsucker, 25, shot and killed Dorothy Weber, 16-year-old senior class honor student, and then committed suicide.

The couple was married secretly in Louisville more than a year ago. When this became known here in October the girl refused to live with her husband.

The murder and suicide took place in front of a church as the girl was returning to school from lunch.

Hunsucker called to the girl from a motor car. Classmates said the couple had talked only a few minutes when Hunsucker drew a pistol and shot the girl through the head. As she fell Hunsucker fired a bullet into his temple. Both died almost instantly.

Friends said Hunsucker had been brooding recently over objections of Dorothy's mother to their marriage.

New York, Nov. 13 (AP).—Oswald Jacoby and his mates on the four aces and a joker team today won the Harold S. Vanderbilt trophy for bridge teams of four by a commanding margin over the other finalist entry, a combination led by H. Huber Boscowitz.

Jacoby, David Burnstine, Richard L. Frey, Michael Gottlieb and Howard Schenken ended the 100 hands in the final round 7,760 points in the lead of Boscowitz, Charles Goren, of Philadelphia; John Rau, of Deal, N. J., and Charles Lochridge.

One-House Legislature Sought in California

San Francisco, Nov. 13 (AP).—Walter McGovern, State senator-elect, announced today he would introduce a constitutional amendment to convert California's two-house Legislature into a single chamber body when the Legislature convenes in January.

He is following the lead of Senator Norris, of Nebraska, who prevailed upon voters of his State to authorize such a change November 6.

Savants Study Native Dance In Depths of Brazil Jungles

Black Magic Key Sought in Probe of African Civilization.

Recife, Brazil, Nov. 13 (AP).—Learned scientists today watched gyrating Negroes, swirling and stamping in the savage rhythms of African dances, and strove to learn from them something of "Afro-Brazil's" future.

The scientists, members of the National Scientific Congress, studied the Negroes' speech, art and customs in an effort to deduce what racial and ethnic implications her African population holds for Brazil.

They sought, too, to bare the mysteries of African jungle magic, hoping through it to aid sufferers from metnal maladies among Brazil's illiterate population.

To the alternate wail of sing-song canticles and the monotonous counterpoint of tom-toms, turbaned Negro women and theri broad-chested, half nude men swung and postured in the intricate rhythm of the Rhumba and similar primitive dances.

The Negroes cal their atavistic ceremonies "Xango." Authorities here say its origins are aesthetically as pure as the Western world's opera and ballet.

Mestre Anselmo, regarded as one of the foremost students of Afro-Brazilian art, revealed to the congress some of the depths of the Negro's racial arts, using primitive African choreography and orchestration.

It is to the influence on the illiterate mind of rites such as the "Xango" that Ulysses Pernambucano, president of the congress, and other assembled savants believe can be traced many problems of Brazilian psychiatry.

Speedy Pen Work Carries Dr. Hurd Into Legislature

Dr. Fritz D. Hurd will sit in the North Dakota Legislature at its next session because he is a fast worker with his fountain pen.

Dr. Hurd, son of Mrs. Annie E. Hurd, of Williamsport, Md., signs a great many papers. He is a member of the welfare board in North Dakota. His friends, according to word received here, slipped a primary application blank in a mass of documents, and Dr. Hurd signed it with his usual flourish.

That made him a candidate for office on the Democratic ticket. When he discovered the ruse of his friends, his name was on the official ticket. It was too late.

He was swept into office with the Democratic landslide.

England May Prohibit Sale of 'Sweep' Tickets

London, Nov. 13 (AP).—Sale of sweepstakes tickets of the Irish Free State hospitals would be banned in England under a betting and lotteries bill now before the House of Commons.

Football pools also would be prohibited. One speaker estimated 5,000,000 people contribute $1,250,000 weekly to football pools, or $45,000,000 during the season. Of this, he said, the promoters pocket nearly $15,000,000 in expenses and profits.

Arizona 'War' On Dam Fades As Work Ends

Governor Halts Troops' March After Action by Washington.

Parker Dam Site, Calif., Nov. 13 (AP).—A threatened "war" over Parker Dam site vanished suddenly tonight when the United States Reclamation Bureau stopped construction work in Arizona territory and Gov. B. B. Moeur of that State halted the march of National Guardsmen toward the scene of controversy.

Weary Arizona militiamen had arrived at Parker, 18 miles south of here, en route to the dam area, when construction activities were halted on instructions from Washington. Gov. Moeur quickly ordered the troopers to stand by at Parker pending further instructions.

The Governor previously announced he would rescind his martial law proclamation of last week upon receiving official notification of the work stoppage. Soon thereafter he got a telegram from Secretary of the Interior Ickes saying orders had been issued against any "invasion of Arizona's rights" until questions in the matter had been "determined ni an orderly manner."

Four States Protest.

Indications were the battle over the benefits of the $12,000,000 project would proceed on a legal instead of a military basis.

Four upper basin States in the Colorado River compact filed formal protests with Secretary Ickes against Arizona's demands for power and water from the project and from Boulder Dam, now under construction.

A pile driver crew of six men was withdrawn from the Arizona end of a temporary bridge being erected across the Colorado River here. Construction officials announced work on the California side would continue.

"I don't want to spend any money unnecessarily," said Gov. Moeur in Phoenix when the work ceased. "If they will halt work until this matter is settled, I will call off the guard. If after calling them off, the work is resumed, I'll send the guard back and camp with them myself."

River Journey Ahead.

The 101 militiamen mobilized yesterday reached Parker tired and dust laden. The precarious 18-mile journey up the river in Arizona's "navy"—the river boats Julia B. and Nellie Jo—still remained between them and their 3-mile square "war zone" delineated by Gov. Moeur's martial law proclamation last week.

The temporary bridge is the first step in the building of a $12,000,000 dam that will furnish water to Southern California metropolitan areas and power to the general area.

Building Trades Conference Called

A. F. of L. Head Will Seek Truce in Union Row.

A convention of the building trades department was called yesterday for November 26, in Washington, by William Green, American Federation of Labor president.

The purpose will be to reconcile differences between the department and the carpenters, bricklayers, masons and electricians unions, which resulted in failure of the department to recognize delegates from those groups at its convention preceding the recent A. F. of L. meeting in San Francisco.

Green pointed out he had been unsuccessful in efforts to settle the differences which caused the A. F. of L. proper to set aside as illegal business transacted at the departmental meeting.

None of Three Killed In Crash Licensed to Fly

Fitzville, Wash., Nov. 13 (AP).—Three men, burned to death when their airplane fell near here yesterday, were identified today as Art Branin, 31; Earl Akers, 23, and "Doc" Akers, 21, brothers, on their way to the Akers' home in Wortland, Ky.

The trio left Wenatchee, Wash., Saturday en route to Kentucky. None of the three had a pilot's license, although Branin, who instructed Akers in flying, claimed to have 200 hours' flying time.

Anti-Betting Bill Wins In House of Commons

London, Nov. 13 (U.P.).—The House of Commons tonight approved the betting lotteries bill which practically kills the legal possibility of sale of Irish Hospital Sweepstakes tickets in Great Britain. The vote was 206 to 38.

The lotteries bill makes illegal the printing, selling and distribution of lottery tickets and forbids newspapers from advertising or publishing a description of the drawing of the lottery or the list of prize winners.

YOU are cordially invited to view a special exhibit of the famous Spode China to be held on our third floor November 14th to the 20th, inclusive.

Spode China is of world fame. The present exhibit of over 400 pieces is practically the same as was shown at the Chicago World's Fair. It contains reproductions of some of the earliest known pieces of pottery and samples of services made especially for persons of renown the world over.

Among the exhibits is the celebrated Mecklenburg service, made in 1763 by order of Queen Charlotte of England. There are some plates with a value of more than $5,000.00 a dozen. Then there are samples of the old molds and old copper plates showing the fascinating history of Spode designs.

We have never shown a more interesting collection of dinnerware; one that we feel every one will delight in seeing. We hope that you will make a special point to see this wonderful collection. The exhibit will be under the personal supervision of Mr. Gresham Hassall, a member of the family which for four generations has been creating Spode designs.

Mr. Hassall will be very glad to tell you in detail of the Spode patterns.

For the convenience of those who can not visit this exhibit during the day, the exhibit will continue on THURSDAY (Nov. 15th) UNTIL 10 P. M. Plan to visit Thursday evening—with one or more friends. You will all enjoy it.

Desk Cleared By Roosevelt For TVA Tour

President Off Tomorrow On Inspection Trip of Power Projects.

By Leon Dure, Jr.

President Roosevelt put in long hours at his desk yesterday in an effort to clear his work basket before leaving tomorrow for a three-day tour of the Tennessee Valley, scene of the Administration's No. 1 experiment in social and economic planning.

He presided at separate meetings of the Cabinet and the National Emergency Council, and received individual reports from a host of New Deal leaders, many of whom will accompany him on his inspection of Muscle Shoals and other developments of the TVA.

Just as the President's return from hte West Coast last summer focused national attention on the gigantic power projects in the Northwest, his forthcoming trip is expected to dramatize the New Deal by centering publicity on its biggest undertaking.

To Check on Progress.

It was two years ago when Mr. Roosevelt last visited Muscle Shoals, accompanied by Senator George W. Norris. Shortly thereafter he announced his plan for the development of the whole Tennessee Valley. His return, therefore, will be for the purpose of visualizing the progress that has been made.

Detailed plans have not yet been announced, but the President is expected to leave tomorrow afternoon by special train for Harrodsburg, Ky., arriving the following morning. There, he will dedicate a monument to the pioneers of that State before moving on to Knoxville, Tenn., close to the Norris Dam on the Clinch River.

After a visit to The Hermitage, old home of Andrew Jackson, the President will proceed to Nashville, Tenn., Muscle Shoals and Tupelo, Miss., the first city to get TVA power. Then he will turn Eastward to Georgia, arriving at his little cottage at Warm Springs Sunday night.

Problems Are Discussed.

Relief, unemployment and problems of social insurance again had a major place on the White House calling list yesterday, as Mr. Roosevelt prepared to transfer the helm of Government from the White House to his little retreat atop Pine Mountain, which is in one of the most remote regions of Georgia.

He conferred with Secretary of Labor Perkins, Relief Adminitsrator Hopkins and Donald R. Richberg, coordinator, on the domestic recovery program, and also discussed international affairs at separate meetings with Secretary of State Hull, Assistant Secretary Summer Welles and others.

Mr. Roosevelt will be absent from the Capitol until December 5, but most of his chief assistants have received notice to report to him at Warm Springs. Secretaries Hull and Ickes will be among those accompanying him on the TVA trip, the former as a native of Tennessee and the latter as Public Works Administrator.

Reports now flowing into the White House will be diverted to Warm Springs, where the President is expected to formulate much of the legislation he has in mind for the next session of Congress. Immediately after his return, he will make his next radio talk to the Nation.

Mellon Assails Claim for Tax As Scandalous

Goes to Appeals Board in Fight Over More Than $3,000,000.

tion "arbitrary and capricious," Mellon's petition insisted both the Justice Department and the Bureau of Internal Revenue had advised Attorney General Cummings "there was no basis for action."

A Pittsburgh Federal grand jury refused to indict Mellon in May for alleged tax evasion, and he said the earlier Treasury announcement that indictments would be sought against violators was "intended to color and distort the facts."

Named With Three Others.

Mellon was included with three other prominent Americans, Thomas S. Lamont, New York banker, Thomas Sidlow, Cleveland lawyer, and James J. Walker, former mayor of New York, in Attorney General Cummings' announcement of criminal proceedings in March. Lamont and Sidlow have settled with the Treasury. The disposition of Walker's case has not been revealed.

A hearing on the petition filed yesterday by Mellon is expected early in the year. Appeals to the circuit court of appeals are permitted.

In his 1931 return, Mellon computed his gross income for that year at $10,840,486 and his net income at $1,927,116. The Government's final figuring put his gross income at $15,951,568 and net income at $13,482,660. It also challenged the amount of his charitable contributions, put down at $3,821,178.

which threatens, the Navy Department is pressing its demands for 1936 before the Budget Bureau, on the thesis, "Strike while the iron is hot."

Parallel with this development, recommendations for increased aircraft construction and a stepping up in the flying personnel of the Navy, were carried before the Federal Aviation Commission yesterday by Rear Admiral E. J. King, chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics.

Admiral King outlined a five to seven-year aircraft building program, calling for an increase to 1,910 airplanes, commensurate with a treaty Navy. To meet the demands for additional pilots, he asked a boost in appointments to the Naval Academy to five for each member of Congress, instead of the three now permitted.

Tracing the development of naval aircraft from a small auxiliary force to a powerful arm of sea defense, Admiral King emphatically opposed a separate or unified air force, insisting it would result in no saving. He said naval aviation "must be manned by naval personnel."

To meet the demand for additional pilots, he asked that Naval Reserve officers be utilized on active duty for periods up to 3 years, and continued training for enlisted pilots. Plane for plane and type for type, he said American aircraft is "equal or superior to any in the world."

Rear Admiral E. S. Land, chief of the Construction Corps of the Navy, followed King before the commission, discussing in executive session confidential phases of national defense.

Recommendations by Representative Carl Vinson, of Georgia, chairman of the House Naval Affairs Committee, for construction of two huge new dirigibles to replace the Akron and the Los Angeles, were taken under consideration by the Navy. The Navy's general board will explore the practicability of the proposal before making any recommendations of its own.

British Will Confer With U. S. Envoys

London, Nov. 13 (AP).—A sudden British decision to confer tomorrow with American delegates to tri-power naval conversations here caused equal surprise among Americans and Japanese representatives tonight.

While it was presumed the British planned to discuss further their proposals for compromise to end the existing deadlock, the Americans and Japanese said they had received no hint as to the purpose of the meeting. Naval circles wondered whether the decision to discuss the compromise plan again with the Americans, who have opposed it, had anything to do with the meeting today at which Britain explained to representatives of her dominions and India just what she offered Japan last week in the way of compromise.

The British proposals, it was understood, involved granting Japan equality on the high seas in principle but not in practice.

Details of the British compromise plans have not been made public, but it was reported they were explained by Sir John Simon, British foreign secretary, and Commander Bolton Eyres-Monsell, first lord of the admiralty, as acceding "in principle" to the Japanese demand for equality, without permitting actual equal tonnage. It was understood that the proposals will be be rejected.

HOLC Cuts Off Further Pleas Of Borrowers

Private Lending Agencies Can Take Over Job, Says Fahey.

on foreign exchange and with the reiterated statement yesterday of Jesse H. Jones, chairman of the RFC that his agency will not seek further funds from Congress, the HOLC action was held to be evidence of progress toward recovery.

Pressure for Government loans to refinance home mortgages as well as for purposes under the jurisdiction of the RFC has diminished greatly in recent weeks. The HOLC reported that the number of new applications "has been dropping steadily since last spring and the weekly record is now about one-sixth of what it was at the peak."

Mr. Fahey said that the HOLC has received a total of about 1,760,000 applications, totaling demands for over $5,650,000,000. Loans aggregating about $2,000,000,000 have been made to about 650,000 of these applicants. More than 90 per cent of the money loaned, Mr. Fahey estimated, has gone to commercial banks, savings banks, insurance companies, building and loan associations and mortgage companies.

The chairman contended that the loans have had the effect of strengthening materially the resources of these institutions.

Speaking of the applications now pending before the HOLC, Mr. Fahey asserted that "a careful resurvey of the situation in all sections, on which the corporation has been for some time engaged, satisfies us that a very substantial proportion of these applications are not eligible and can not be accepted by the corporation."

Many Ineligible Cases.

"In spite of every precaution taken," he continued, "we continue to receive thousands of applications which we find after investigation are not eligible and can not be possibly made the basis of a loan by the corporation. Most of these ineligible cases are cases where the mortgagor and mortgagee should work out their mutual problem.

"The corporation recommends that wherever possible, the applicant mortgagor continue his payments on his present loan in order that he may be in a position to refinance the loan through some agency other than this corporation. The continued receipt of these applications complicate our operations and delays attention to the cases which should be expedited."

Of the 1,760,000 applications received, 56,120 had been withdrawn up to November 2, while 74,351 were rejected before the preliminary appraisal, chiefly because they were not eligible under the law. Aside from the approximately 650,000 applications on which loans were made, the remainder were in various stages of examination.

On November 2, there were 112,105 applications held pending adjustments after the preliminary appraisal; 123,358 held for adjustment after the fee appraisal and 61,900 held for title reports.

The HOLC was established in the spring of 1933 as an emergency agency to rescue small home owners from financial distress. The corporation is under the jurisdiction of the Home Loan Bank Board, which also has jurisdiction over Home Loan Banks, discount institutions for real estate paper.

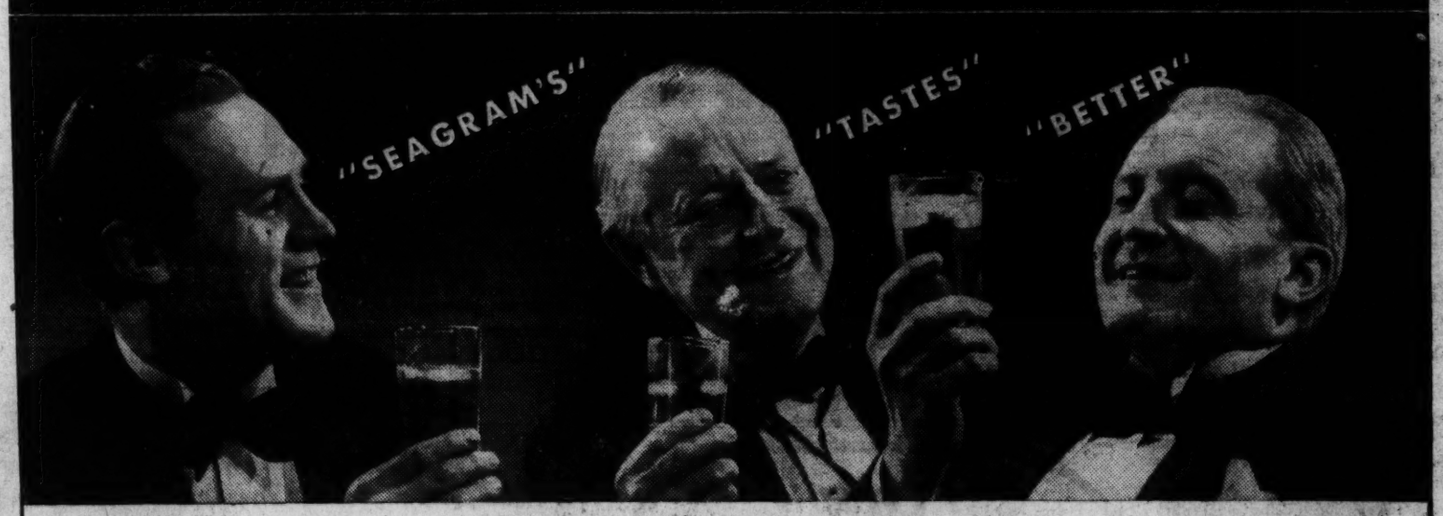
THREE LITTLE WORDS



—that's why CROWN WHISKIES now hold 1st PLACE!

There's a significant trend in America today, a trend toward finer things. In whiskey, this is markedly true. People everywhere are showing a preference for better whiskey. As evidence of this trend, there is the amazing success and popularity of Seagram's moderately priced Crown Whiskies.

The success of CROWN BLENDED WHISKIES is based solely on the fact that people—looking for a finer whiskey—have found one that tastes better. We can confidently say today, as we said when we first introduced Crown Whiskies—"Regardless of their moderate price, test Crown Whiskies the way costliest whiskies are tested—for warmth, for aroma, for taste!"

Plants Plan $120,000,000 Expenditures

Huge Expansion Program Hints Definite Return of Better Times.

New York, Nov. 13 (AP).—A favorable straw in the economic wind appeared today in tabulations of expenditures for expansion of outstanding major industries, largely expenditures of idle cash.

Figures tabulated by Standard Statistics Co. show nearly $120,000,000 of capital expenditures by 19 companies either undertaken or planned since the first of this year. This the company believes is significant of "definite evidences of a constructive future viewpoint."

It is pointed out, however, that "it is doubtless too early to assume, merely because certain leading strong companies are using idle cash assets to expand or improve plant facilities, that a rapid trend in this direction on the part of industry generally will develop."

Ford to Expand.

Heading the list is the Ford Motor Co. with plans to spend about $13,000,000 for two large steel mills and $2,000,000 for expansion of the River Rouge plant, both items being in cash.

Packard Motor Car Co. plans to spend about $6,200,000 cash for plant reorganization to include a small-car division.

Allied Chemical && Dye Corporation plans to spend more than $5,000,000 cash for a new alkali plant at Baton Rouge, La., and American Cyanamid is putting $7,000,000 in cash and new bonds into a new Alkali plant at Corpus Christi, Tex.

E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. is listed to spend $10,000,000 cash in expansion of its Argentine plant, and $5,000,000 cash on its plant for making solid urea at Belle, W. Va., and an addition to its Ampthill (Va.) rayon plant.

Matheson Alkali, through sale of stock, is listed for a $7,000,000 expenditure on a new alkali plant at Lake Charles, La., and Union Carbide & Carbon is down for $10,000,000 cash for its synthetic chemical plant at Whiting, Ind.

Four steel companies are listed for $27,000,000 expansion. They are National Steel, $12,000,00 cash; United States Steel, $5,000,000 to $6,000,000 cash; Wheeling Steel, $2,500,000 cash; Youngstown Sheet & Tube, $6,000,000 cashand $2,500,000 probably through sale of onds.

Oil Firms Join March.

Union Oil of California is cheduled to spend $2,000,000 cash to build a new lubricating plant at the company's Oleum Refinery; Socony-Vacuum Oil, $5,000,000 cash, construction of two oil tankers; and Standard of California, $4,000,000 cash, new oil pipe line from San Joaquin fields to Estero Bay terminal.

Other expenditures made or planned include Standard brands, $2,000,000 cash, new building for manufacturing and storage; Distillers Corporation-Seagrams, an unnamed amount in an exchange of stock for acquisition of Lawrenceburg, Ind., and Maryland Distilleries; Hiram Walker-Gooderham & Worts, $6,000,000 cash and bank loans, plants at Peoria, Ill., and elsewhere; Celanese Corporation, $1,000,000 cash, and Industrial Rayon, an indefinite amount of cash, both for plant expansion.

While it is agreed the listing is incomplete, it is taken as evidence that the larger organizations are willing to risk their capital during a time when many doubted that confidence had returned to the industrial community.

school after he had placed it there. She substituted a smaller one, Armstrong said, and when he ordered her to return the larger flag, Miss De Lee refused.

Miss De Lee countered with the explanation that the big flag hung within inches of an oil stove and interfered with access to the alcove. There was no refusal on her part to display a flag, she insisted.

A petition circulated by Miss De Lee's friends asking that Armstrong be removed or told to "keep hands off" was signed by 15 of the 19 residents in the school district.

a good sign. The resources of the country are tremendous."

Cardinal O'Connell, looking hale and hearty despite his three-score and 15 years, shook hands with Pat McKenna, the White House doorkeeper, and each of the reporters who took part in the interview.

He admitted laughingly that his book, "Recollections of 70 Years," had not yet earned him any great amount of money, although it had been read widely.

Guest at Luncheon.

Cardinal O'Connell attended yesterday morning a meeting of the board of trustees of Catholic University, of which he has been a member 27 years, and afterward he was guest of honor at a luncheon given at the Shoreham Hotel by Michael MacWhite, Minister of the Irish Free State.

Other guests were Hirosi Saito, Ambassador of Japan; Stanislaw Patek, Ambassador of Poland; James A. Farley, Postmaster General; Henry G. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture; Felipe A. Espil, Ambassador of Argentina; Edgar L. G. Prochnik, Minister of Austria; Dr. Ricardo J. Alfaro, Minister of Panama; Dr. Don Adrian Recinos, Minister of Guatemala; Thomas Jefferson Coolidge, Undersecretary of the Treasury; Jesse Jones, chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; Prince Eugene de Ligne, Counselor of the Belgian Embassy; Marquis Alberto Rossi Longhi, Counselor of the Italian Embassy; Dr. Rudolph Leitner, Counselor of the German Embassy; T. K. Bewley, Financial Counselor of the British Embassy; Robert Brennan, Secretary of the Irish Free State Legation, and Frank C. Walker, former director of the National Emergency Council.

Chalice Presentation.

The Catholic bishops of the United States, at a luncheon in Caldwell Hall at Catholic University, at 1 p. m. today, will present to Cardinal O'Connell a scroll bearing their signatures and expressions of their esteem, and then, in their name, Archbishop Michael J. Curley, of Baltimore, will present to him a golden chalice—the highest tribute which Catholic churchmen can render to one of their faith.

Cardinal O'Connell will be honored in the gymnasium of the university at 9 o'clock tonight in the greatest ecclesiastical celebration Washington has seen since the late Cardinal Gibbons' golden jubilee was observed here 15 years ago.

Cardinal O'Connell, on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of his ordination, will be given the degree of doctor of laws.

From 4,000 to 5,000 persons are expected to witness the ceremony, including Attorney General Homer Cummings, who will represent President Roosevelt; Postmaster General Farley, Supreme Court Justice Pierce Butler, and former Gov. Alfred E. Smith, of New York.

A host of diplomats and 80 bishops also will attend.

wedding, near Louisville, to her own sudden nuptials, Princess Bertha's engagement to Donald Mack-Intosh, bank clerk at Sarasota, Fla., had been announced to her friends.

"I'm happier, much happier, than I ever believed it possible to be," said Princess Bertha on her arrival here yesterday.

She went immediately to the home of her mother, Mme. Julia Cantacuzene-Grant, at 2029 Connecticut avenue.

The bridegroom, who intends to "go into banking" in Toronto, will arrive some time today from his mother's home, in Cincinnati. The couple will stay at the Sulgrave Club, on Massachusetts avenue, for a few days, then leave for Toronto and house-hunting.

The ceremony was performed at 3 a. m. by Magistrate Benson R. Veasey. The bride gave her age as 30, the bridegroom his as 39. The couple met long ago, it was revealed. The Princess and her husband succeeded in keeping their marriage secret from friends as they fled Louisville.

Divorced a Year Ago.

About a year ago Princess Bertha was divorced from her first husband, Bruce Smith, in Louisville, and her maiden name restored. Mr. Smith was given custody of their then-22 months-old son.

Last month, shortly after her mother obtained American citizenship, and divorced Prince Michael Cantacuzene, announcement of the Princess' engagement to Mr. Mack-Intosh was made.

In his office at the Sarasota Bank, where Prince Cantacuzene, Princess Bertha's father, is vice president, Mr. Mack-Intosh said his engagement to Princess Bertha had been broken about ten days ago.

"We decided each of us believed many things with which the other could not agree," he said. "I wish the couple all the happiness in the world."

The bride, with her brother and sister, fled Russia during the revolution, came to this country, and joined her grandmother at Sarasota.

"Will this marriage last? Is it for keeps?" Princess Bertha was asked yesterday.

"Oh, I hope so," she replied. "I can only say that we are very, very happy!"

opposition to a dictatorship and his praise of the efforts of retired Premier Gaston Doumergue.

Flandin stood for a confidence vote on a motion for "confidence in the cabinet to maintain the truce, reform the State and accomplish economic recovery."

Premier Applauded.

Three-fourths of the chamber, including some Socialists, applauded the huge, youthful-appearing premier as he rose to his full 6 feet 6 inches and read his short ministerial declaration, outlining the program of his administration.

Flandin appealed for a continuance of the political truce which prevailed during the nine months Gaston Doumergue retained power as head of a coalition government. The premier urged governmental stability with the cooperation of Parliament—but bluntly warned the deputies that he was prepared to resort to dissolution "if necessary."

The premier announced he would proceed with a program of economic and financial measures to fight the crisis faced at home and abroad, including France's agricultural problems, and seek to maintain a stable franc.

The cabinet at a meeting prior to the convening of Parliament at 3 p. m., decided all sessions for the moment must be devoted to debate on the 1935 budget, which Flandin is determined shall be voted rapidly.

Street Parades Forbidden.

To prevent repetition of the riots of last February, the government ministers also decided to forbid all street parades and demonstrations for the present, of either right or left wing adherents.

The new premier indicated his determination to carry out the constitution reform policies of his predecessor, the white-haired Doumergue, giving the president more power over Parliament to stabilize the position of the cabinet in the republic's form of government. He called this task "an immense but necessary task on which the fate of our regime depends."

Laval May Postpone Conference With Duce

Rome, Nov. 13 (AP).—Pierre Laval, French foreign minister, probably will not come to Rome before next year for a conference with Premier Mussolini, it was understood today.

Conversations between the foreign ministries of Paris and Rome, one informant said, are proceeding slowly. They are hampered by the change in the French cabinet.

Sale of Cardinals Called Imminent

the Cardinal offices, was transferred to a hotel.

Wentz is seeking to purchase Breadon's majority holdings, representing 77 per cent of the stock of the National League Club. Unofficially, it was understood the purchase price was to be slightly in excess of $1,000,000.

Would Rule Minor Leagues.

If the transaction goes through, as now appears certain, Wentz will gain control not only of the Cardinals, but its "chain store" organization. This includes the Rochester International League Club, the Columbus American Association team, the Houston Texas League team and several other minor league clubs.

The Post-Dispatch says Branch Rickey, vice president and general manager of the Cardinals, has been active in trying to arrange sale of Breadon's control of the Cardinal chain clubs.

Shortly after Breadon had indicated last summer that he was prepared to dispose of his holdings if he could get a fair price, the newspaper says, Rickey went to Ponca City, Okla., Wentz's home, for the first conference.

It is believed that under new ownership Rickey would become president of the Cardinal organization, because of his knowledge of the "farm" system.

Secrecy Shrouds Move.

Neither Breadon nor Wentz could be reached late today, and Rickey declined to comment.

Control of the Cardinals was purchased by Breadon in 1920, when he became president. Since 1926 his team has won five National League and three world championships.

Rickenbacker Pauses Here on N. Y.-Miami Hop

Record Is Broken By Rickenbacker

war buddies, Carroll Cohen and Cedric Fauntleroy.

"Aha! An orchid!" laughed the flier, as he showed his prize to the crowd of 150 gathered at the airport.

The Douglas transport ship, owned by the Eastern Airlines, Inc., had taken off yesterday morning from the Newark Airport at 6:08 a. m., after the flier and a group of air officials breakfasted in New York at 5 a. m. Rickenbacker stated that he would try to land in Miami in six hours.

Instead, the southward flight required 8 hours and 38 minutes. Head winds buffeted the ship throughout the flight south, with the arrival in Washington at 7:38 and the take-off at 8 a. m.

The fliers mistook Palm Beach for Miami and descended from 10,000 feet nearly to the ground before discovering the error. This cost more time. Arrival at Miami was at 2:44 p. m.

The plane took off from Miami at 3:46 p. m.

Far behind the hoped-for speed, as the head winds encountered on the first half of the flight became cross winds on the return journey, Rickenbacker was yet far ahead of schedules existing until today. His was the first flight on a new eight-hour service from New York to Miami, as other planes on that route now require 12 hours and nine stops.

The plane is the same with which the speed ace had cracked transcontinental transport records.

The 14 hungry passengers said that they weren't tired.

While Rickenbacker commanded the trip, actual flying was done by Erlon H. "Pete" Parker, chief pilot of Eastern Air Lines, and Gene Brown, co-pilot.

The Washington welcome on the southbound visit of the fliers was headed by Eugene Vidal, director of aeronautics of the Department of Commerce.

A bundle of Washington Posts was carried to Miami by the plane on the first half of the trip.

M'Donald Bars Move to Reopen War Debt Study

Chamberlain Adds Curb; Won't Call Another Conference.

London, Nov. 13 (AP).—Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald and Neville Chamberlain, chancellor of the exchequer, between them today placed an effective curb on any efforts to bring the war debts question up for reconsideration.

After MacDonald told the House of Commons he planned to call no new conference to deal with the matter, the chancellor declared the whole question of international debts was in abeyance at the present moment.

That statement, he said, applied equally to the international debts discussed at the Lausanne conference, and to the war debts owed to the United States.

MacDonald was questioned from the floor as to whether he intended to redeem his promise to call another conference of the powers because the creditor nations had failed to obtain settlement of their obligations to the United States.

He replied: "I do not consider that circumstances calling for a new conference have arisen and it is not my intention to call such a conference."

At the same time he assured the Commons that Europe need not fear finding herself "back on the Young plan."

Chamberlain told the House he was "not at present in a position to make a statement" as to whether the government had decided war debts owed the United States could not be satisfactorily settled, or whether the negotiations were still in progress.

W. C. T. U. to Push Legislature Plan

Seeks to Hold Fast to State Anti-Liquor Laws.

Cleveland, Nov. 13 (AP).—Although National prohibition remains the major goal of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, its immediate objective for 1935 will be to hold fast to existing State anti-liquor laws, and seek territorial gains principally in individual States or smaller subdivisions.

Legislative plans of the union were announced at its national convention here today by Dr. Izora Scott, of Washington, representative of the organization's bureau of legislation.

Calling for a vigorous and enlarged legislative program next year Dr. Scott enumerated its objectives, including bills promoting international peace, measures providing for higher standards for motion pictures, and opposition to legalized gambling.

Election Ambush Now Holds 7 Men

Two More Seized in Death of Fire Paraders.

Pottsville, Pa., Nov. 13 (AP).—Two more men of Kelayres, mountain mining town, were locked up with five others tonight, charged with the slaying of five miners in the ambush of a preelection parade.

Philip Bruno, tax collector, and his son, Arthur, were arrested as Judge Roy Jicks asked Attorney General William A. Schnader to appoint a special prosecutor to handle the case in January.

Formal charges also have been preferred against Joseph Bruno, former county detective; his sons, James and Alfred; his nephew, Paul Bruno, and Anthony Orlando, a neighbor. Philip Bruno is a cousin of Joseph.

Chicago's Police Interrupt Pleas For 'Cawfee' Cash

Chicago, Nov. 13 (AP).—There were few mutters of "brother, can you spare a dime?" in the Loop today.

Police rounded up more than 225 of the professional pliers of the "nickel for a cuppa cawfee" racket yesterday, asserting there wasn't an amateur in the jail load.

Pointing to Jack Bement, 41, as typical of the brotherhood that assigned one another certain beats to cover, police said he quit a job as a baker because he found he could make at least $2 a day by "working" only three hours in the lucrative profession of extracting change from passers-by.

The group, said police, will be charged with vagrancy.

State Workers Asked by Peery To Aid Charity

Virginia Governor Talks With Department Heads on Fund Drive.

Richmond, Nov. 13 (AP).—Gov. Peery today conferred with State department heads on the obligations of State workers living in Richmond to support the community fund in its approaching campaign.

He also issued to employes of the departments a statement reminding them that "the tremendous number now on the local relief rolls prohibits anything more than the giving of food, some fuel and in a few instances clothing. In practice, the real problems underlying the family's dependency are left entirely to the private agencies to solve. Because of the enormous load the relief workers, under Federal funds, can give little specialized services to these families."

The Governor said that grave as unemployment is, there yet are thousands of families where there is no employable person and that widows, aged couples and families where the bread winner is incapacitated for work or has deserted must be cared for through private channels. Neither private nor public agencies can handle all relief problems alone, he said, but each must be supplemented by the other.

Several fund speakers, introduced by the Governor, spoke briefly to the department heads. Gov. Peery said the matter of contributions by State employes who work in Richmond but maintain their residence in other parts of the State should be left to their individual consciences.

Manassas, Va., Nov. 13 (Spl.).—The hearing of Olaf Pierson, charged with killing Edward Walsh the night of October 30, was held in Manassas this morning. He was held for grand jury action.

Burdette testified there was no altercation, but he and Walsh, coon hunters, entered Pierson's home with a coon and a dog. They were ordered out by Pierson. Burdette left, but Walsh stayed and a number of shots were fired, according to testimony.

Dr. Marstellar testified Walsh was wounded several times.

It is estimated a new election will cost the county between $6,000 and $7,000.

"Red Agitator" In Student Row Is Suspended

Action Follows Carliner's Refusal to Promise Curb on Speech.

David Carliner, blamed by school officials for attempting to stir up student defiance of administration authority following last week's football ban, yesterday was suspended from classes at McKinley High School "until he is willing to stop agitating."

Young Carliner, son of Louis Carliner, Clarendon, Va., grocer, described by his teachers as an excellent student with grades far above the average, was to graduate from McKinley next February.

The suspension order was issued by Frank C. Daniel at a conference with Carliner and his father in Daniel's office at the school yesterday morning.

Daniel said he asked the student what "his attitude would be if I agreed to readmit him on his promise not to start any more trouble."

Carliner replied that to make such a promise would violate principles of free speech and individual rights for which he stands.

Carliner is a member of the National Student League, allegedly a scholastic Communist organization, and has formed a chapter of the society at McKinley, which he heads. He has been an active champion of student self-government for some time, and, according to school heads, took advantage of the feeling against authorities, because of cancelation of the football schedule last week, to promulgate his views.

At the conference with Daniel, Carliner's father urged acceptance of the principal's terms, but the boy declined to reconsider.

"I learned somewhere that you should never lose your character. If I would accept Mr. Daniel's terms, I would lose my character," Carliner told The Post.

A meeting of the National Student League has been called for tonight, but the place and time of the gathering is being kept secret, because, Carliner said, "if the school authorities knew who the league members are they would be suspended at once, of course."

Carliner said he was planning a "fight to the finish" for reinstatement, and he expressed confidence that the Board of Education would ultimately override Daniel.

A Move For Stability.

All transactions in foreign exchange, transfers of credit, and exports of currency other than gold certificates, have been granted a blanket license by the Administration. This means that the free movement of funds in the international money markets is authorized and resumed.

Undersecretary T. Jefferson Coolidge, who sponsored the move for the Treasury, points out that because all applications had been granted previously, the new move does not really represent a change in policy. That may be. But it does not minimize the importance of the intimation that there will be, so far as the Administration can now foresee, no change in policy with regard to the gold content of the dollar.

The Treasury could not have made this announcement, if any modification of the gold content of the dollar were under consideration, without laying itself open to the charge not only of permitting a speculation against the dollar, but actually of encouraging it. Such further modification must now be assumed to be most unlikely. In consequence there will be general satisfaction over the announcement as an indication of determination to abandon currency manipulation as a factor in the New Deal program.

Mr. Coolidge states that he does not expect any large outflow of capital to result from the new decree. On the contrary, it may result in a large return flow of capital to the United States, encouraged by the promise of continuing stability in the monetary field.

In High School.

High schools are, or should be, training schools for modern life. Something beyond the essentials of classroom study ought to be an important part of the curriculum. Upon graduation the minority fortunate enough to be sent to college, as well as the majority which must find place in the world without advantages of further education, will alike discover an environment to which adaptation should be rendered easy, rather than difficult.

Character training is especially important in the schools at a time when one of the most fearsome of social problems lies in that great stream of adolescents which must annually be absorbed by our economy. If these youngsters have for four years been discouraged to think for themselves, have been denied a measure of self-government, have been kept from expressing their views upon current questions, they can hardly be expected to lend much aid in solving the problems of democracy.

On the other hand, if they have been used to self-government, to developing their own resourcefulness to solve the problems of the school community, they will be that much better equipped when they are freed of classroom restraint. One is inclined to believe that the over-advertised McKinley student who has questioned and talked and given serious thought to the immediate problems of his own little social world may easily develop into a most useful citizen—assuming his case is sympathetically handled now.

Try American.

They came, they saw, they laughed. Which was the end of what was almost a perfect trick. Laughter at the wrong time is the most devastating thing in the world. Especially to the performer on the stage.

The London Society of Magicians has offered a $25,000 award to any one performing the famous legendary rope trick on a stage specified by that society. Saturday afternoon Robert Heger courageously attempted in St. Paul what has hitherto always been regarded as an East Indian prerogative. There were two dusky Hindus stationed behind the performer. The audience was waiting to be convinced that the coiled rope upon the stage would suddenly ascend to a height of 30 feet into the air upon its own volition. It did so. But in throwing light upon the subject, the electrician did his job all too well. In the glaring spotlight a thin, shiny wire was revealed, stretching from the rope to the drops above.

Perhaps the surroundings of the amateur magician were as much responsible for his failure as the electrician's failure to keep the lights subdued. There is nothing more redolent of the Far East than an unattached rope suddenly rearing its ugly head in the air. And there is nothing more foreign to mysticism than the vast impersonality of an American auditorium.

The unsuccessful St. Paul magician is more to be pitied than blamed. The very nature of his attempted feat was as incongruous as a "walkathon" in Lapland. A maxim which might be well adopted by good performers of any kind is "when in Rome, use Roman candles." It seems un-American to go to so much trouble to import hokum from abroad while there is so much demand for the domestic product.

No Room For Compromise.

Leaders in Congress who are seeking a compromise on the bonus issue are merely playing into the hands of the veterans' lobby. The history of Congressional dealings with veterans of previous wars, in addition to the experience of recent years, indicates that problems of this sort are never settled by a policy of progressive surrender. Concessions granted have almost invariably been used as positions of advantage from which to press further demands.

From the viewpoint of good government it is imperative that the issue be decided on the basis of the national interest, and not by knuckling down to a powerful lobby. In this matter President Roosevelt has taken a courageous stand on principle. In his Roanoke address he unequivocally informed the veterans that the needs of the unemployed are of greater national importance than prepayment of the bonus. The issue was so clearly and emphatically drawn that Congress should need no further urging to support the Administration's policy.

To avoid the appearance of being out of harmony with the White House viewpoint, some members of Congress are now trying to merge the bonus demand with the relief problem. "The whole matter can be solved quite simply," says Representative Buchanan, "by paying the bonus on a relief basis." He suggests that every veteran on the dole be paid the face value of his bonus certificate. Discrimination of this sort would, of course, put a premium on indigence. Moreover, it would involve a special gift to veterans on relief rolls, which would be denied both to the elderly and therefore most necessitous unemployed, and to the employed veterans.

Haphazard schemes of this kind completely ignore the nature of the Government's obligation to the veterans. The adjusted compensation certificates are endowment life insurance policies. Obviously it is economically impossible to pay the full face value of a life insurance policy to an insured person whenever he becomes a recipient of public charity. Even if such an arrangement were practical, it would make no contribution toward solution of unemployment. The need of the unemployed veterans is the security of permanent employment, not a lump-sum dole which, even if carefully husbanded, would soon be spent.

The plan to abolish interest rates on money lent to veterans is scarcely less specious. Unless the money invested in insurance for the veterans' benefit draw interest, the Treasury will not have funds to pay the certificates when due. In that event Congress would later have to appropriate additional funds—substantially increasing the actual cost of the bonus. Here again discrimination against veterans who have not borrowed money on their certificates would be encountered.

The Administration has greatly encouraged the veterans' lobby by loose spending of many varieties. This makes it the more important that the line of demarcation between spending in the national interest, and in that of a well-organized minority, should be fearlessly adhered to, as emphasized by the President at Roanoke.

Our Speed Limit.

District Attorney Garnett's outspoken remarks about the District's speed law can not be dismissed by reiteration of obvious arguments in favor of safe driving. Safety is, as it should be, the first consideration in formulating traffic rules. But it is not the only factor. If it were, the horse and buggy would still be in vogue. The question raised by Mr. Garnett demands consideration also from the broad viewpoint of public convenience and necessity.

There seems to be no direct relationship between laws governing speed and the rate of automobile accident fatalities. Some cities without specific speed limits have fewer motor accidents per 100,000 persons than does Washington with its relatively strict rules. In other cases the reverse is true. District officials have always refused to consider an increase in the speed limit in the past on the ground that Washington should not take a chance on upsetting its excellent record. Now the rate of motor fatalities here is considerably higher than the average for 86 cities reporting to the Department of Commerce. A speed law adopted before the advent of four-wheel brakes and many other modern improvements can no longer be defended as a special safeguard against traffic accidents.

The argument that an obsolete law is conducive to safety is vitiated by the fact that motorists do not obey it. Every one who drives a car in Washington knows that traffic moves faster than 22 miles per hour, except when congested in the rush hours. Only occasional efforts are made to enforce the speed law. As Mr. Garnett says, it is unenforceable. A situation which invites every motorist to violate the law every day is a factor in the widespread disrespect for all law.

To accept Mr. Garnett's suggestion that speed laws be suddenly abolished would be to rush to the opposite extreme. Not all drivers can be relied upon to use good judgment as to the speed they travel, nor even to decide when fast driving constitutes recklessness. On the other hand, Traffic Director Van Duzer concedes that "maybe our speed limit is too low," although he does not care to sponsor an increase. Between these two positions there is ample latitude for reasonable adjustments without danger of sacrificing the public safety.

Relief Deficiencies.

Harry Hopkins, Federal Relief Administrator, probably provoked a few sardonic smiles when he addressed the representatives of the federated Jewish Philanthropic Societies in New York on Sunday night. Speaking less than a week after the election, in which the question of relief grants played such an important role, he said, "I want to warn you as solemnly as I can that the danger of attaching public relief to our American political system is very real."

Apart from that bit of unconscious humor, Mr. Hopkins showed himself deeply conscious of the shortcomings of the system that he administers, and properly anxious to see it superseded by permanent and systematic insurance against the hazards of illness, infirmity and unemployment. He may well be oversanguine as to the possibility of assuring every employable individual an income that would provide for an "American way of living." But he has clearly defined the goal of all social and economic reforms as being security rather than relief. Furthermore, he believes that "in so far as employment is concerned, as a matter of national policy the objective should be to find employment in private industry, maintained and operated for profit."

Mr. Hopkins also makes a valid and timely distinction between those relief activities that properly belong to public agencies and those that devolve upon private charitable organizations. The state must accept responsibility for satisfying the pressing material needs of the unemployed for food, shelter and clothing. That still leaves an immense field for private agencies to undertake relief activities that help to build character and to sustain the morale of the destitute.

The magnitude of the unemployment problem has been aggravated, as Mr. Hopkins points out, not only through the normal growth of population which each year brings an army of young people into an already congested labor market, but also because of the elderly who are forced to keep on working, having lost the means for retiring. Young and old alike present social problems that lie outside the province of public agencies primarily concerned to relieve direct want. Within that particular field, the relief administrator is confronted by a task of appalling magnitude, not lessened by the haphazard experimentation of the past.

The present relief system, its administrator admits, is not capable of providing a solution of the problem of unemployment, while its costliness prevents its indefinite continuance. But it is not the waste of public funds which Mr. Hopkins regards as its worst weakness. This, he rightly thinks, is the "tragic waste of human values" involved in what he calls a "totally un-American way of meeting a problem."

The Mooney Ruling.

Welcome light in obscure corners of the Mooney case is promised by the Supreme Court order calling upon the State of California to show cause why a petition for a habeas corpus writ should not be granted. This is a marked change from the position taken by the Supreme Court on this case in 1918.

The sentence of life imprisonment passed on Mooney as a result of the 1916 bombing outrage has been followed by revelations disturbing to that public opinion which is rightly sensitive whenever the name of Justice is invoked. No Governor has seen fit to pardon him, but, in spite of that significant fact, widespread and honest doubt as to the propriety of Mooney's continued imprisonment has been aroused and remains unallayed.

California is now required to present the case against Mooney in a way which should result, one way or another, in disposing of the agitation which has been so carefully fanned and fed. Whatever the outcome in this instance, moreover, it is well that the individual State should occasionally be brought to realize that the Federal Government is vitally concerned with the preservation of constitutional guarantees.

The Farmer's Wife.

Occasionally in the news there appear stories of women who, by sitting in self-dug ditches, balk for a time all efforts on the part of great corporations to evict them. These ditch-diggers are usually fortified with an ominous supply of bricks, and an unshakable conviction that it is the "principle of the thing" that counts.

Now we learn from Dr. James E. Rice, president of the Northeastern Poultry Producers Council, that it would be "unwise economically and dynamite politically" for the AAA to attempt production control of the Nation's poultry industry. His reason for this belief is the fact that 80 per cent of such production in this country is controlled by farmers' wives who, he says, "could not be regulated by the Government."

The three blind A's, see how they run, they all run after the farmer's wife, to cut off retail with a carving knife. But what a pity that this sage Dr. Rice did not earlier inform the Government that it is, after all, the woman who rules the roost.

Don't worry because you realize what a fool you were yesterday; rather, congratulate yourself upon being wiser today.

Sounds paradoxical, but you can't make the grade unless you stay on the level.

The Post welcomes letters from its readers. All communications must be signed with the writer's name and address. Upon publication initials or pen names will be used if requested. Letters are subject to condensation and in no case should they exceed 250 words.

Leave Room For Growth.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In my recent communication opposing selling part of the land acquired for a municipal center, I made the points that the buildings in the Federal triangle are made ugly because of the crowding of buildings in a space too small.

I here suggest several other facts for consideration: George Washington believed in broad, open spaces as a setting for Government buildings, just as he believed in broad streets and avenues. His city plan has never been improved. Furthermore, the two buildings—the Capitol and White House—the plans of which he approved, allowed of expansion without destroying their beauty.

The old Postoffice Building was completed in 1897. It was to provide space for both the Postoffice Department and the city postoffice as well for the next 50 years. Within 10 years the city postoffice was crowded out, and by 1920 the Postmaster General was complaining of lack of space.

The Library of Congress has about the same history. The same is true of the House Office Building erected in 1910. Likewise the main city postoffice building opposite the Union Station. The Department of Commerce Building, only finished about three years ago, and then called monstrous, is now too small. The Archives Building, not yet completed, may have to be enlarged at a cost of several million dollars.

The city center plan first proposed was too pretentious—buildings too massive, too costly. The only thing about the plan which was commendable was the large acreage provided, but, at that, none too large for future growth.

Let us not make the same mistake that was made when the present costly and ornate Municipal Building was placed downtown in a restricted space known to be under consideration for Federal building purposes. That building was erected in 1910; and old employes have told me how everybody wondered when the city administration would ever be able to use all the building. Yet by 1916 it was too small.

It behooves city planners and citizens and Government authorities to be careful to provide space for extension of buildings, which is much less expensive than to tear down costly buildings within a few years only to provide more office space at a greater cost.

Distributing Praise.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In his preelection speech, Herbert Hoover promised everybody a flock of chickens, and a pair of automobiles. In his preelection speech Franklin Roosevelt said, "What this man's country needs is a New Deal."

And, no sooner than he was elected to the Presidency, the New Deal was made by making banking conditions safe, and administering to the wants of the needy.

And in favor of the above I am just wondering why the poets and sages who are singing false praises for the recent change in national politics do not give the credit to whom it really belongs.

Games of Chance.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I see by the papers that laws controlling gambling are to be made more restrictive. This follows the intolerant course of the prohibitionists, culminating in the Jones five-and-ten law.

People will gamble. They always have gambled. They always will. They will wager honesty and lawfully in the light of day, or with cheats in dark places.

In the first case, a fraction of the gambling spoils goes to taxes. In the second place, a fraction goes to crooks, killings, corruption and crime.

It has been, and is true, that "good" people are responsible for, and guilty of, causing most of the trouble and much of the crime in the world. "McC."

"Slightly Startling."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In the rotogravure section of The Post for Sunday, November 4, there occurs a picture of the courtyard of the old City Hotel or Gadsby's Tavern in Alexandria, with the information that "the spire of a nearby church shows up over the top of the old tavern." For the enlightenment of the writer of this caption, I wish to state that this spire is on the City Market House, and not on any church.

There is no church with a spire or steeple within three squares of Gadsby's Tavern. The Market House steeple has been in its present position for 60-odd years, and its sudden transformation into a church spire is, to say the least, slightly startling to Alexandrians, to whom it has always been the chief landmark of the town.

Small Depositors.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The bankers have been complaining about the Government in business—and yet they have recently put in vogue a system of penalizing the small depositor which is bound to produce a reaction that will crystallize public opinion against their institutions, with the net result that the Government will be forced to open up banking facilities for the benefit of the masses.

In times like these such actions have a great tendency to destroy confidence.

As We Observed Yesterday: The Students Came Out Best

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: When you said in your editorial, "Teapot Tempest," that the high school football debacle "was certainly less serious than the cycle of blunders that has arisen as a consequence," I could heartily concur. But there our agreement seems to be at an end.

When you condemn our "District Commissioners' expressions of sympathy for the cause of the students," I'm inclined to feel a little bit sorry that the editorial staff of such a paper as The Post hasn't the same bigness of heart. Personally, I feel that we in the District should be extremely grateful that we have as Commissioners men who have seen "the signs of the times" and who also have that quality of mercy that wants justice done to all.

The final paragraph, however, seems to attain the heights of arrogance. Our children are "beneficiaries," according to your statement, and, as such, should be grateful for the free crumbs of knowledge dispensed. In this day and age, when kindly, thinking people are doing their utmost to keep little children who must accept charity, in the fullest sense of the word, from feeling the sting of dependency!

The recent election should be a warning to all that "old fogeyism" has gasped its last. Modern children naturally look askance at the suggestion that it is "not theirs to reason why." Having been taught in the schools that they are free-born, in a country that prominently features justice with her scales for weighing the problems of the free-born; having been assisted in setting up a students' council, where students were supposed to aid justice in settling disputes among the student body—well, only one steeped in outmoded tradions would not sympathize with the children when the walls of their high ideals come tumbling before their very eyes and ears.

All thinking parents probably agreed with Tech's principal that the demonstration, in front of a high-ranking school authority's residence, was not the right means of protest. To my mind, the most unfortunate part of that occurrence is that the largest share of the noise and destruction was probably not made by the school children but by the rabble that is always ready at the slightest provocation to voice disapproval of all existing conditions.

At this point, perhaps I should say that I am not the mother of any child involved, but I believe that I understand the sense of injustice under which all the high school students of the District of Columbia are laboring. Under such circumstances, if they talk of "striking," why call it a "silly threat," as if children should be expected to know better than their elders? Are not the papers filled these days with talk of strikes? And high school students read the papers!

H. B. B.

Washington, Nov. 10.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: While the boys and girls of our high schools are branded as "hoodlums" and "roughnecks" by the high school officials and these statements are concurred in by our Board of Education, permit me to dwell on a certain phase of "star chamber" proceedings which has had little or no publicity to date. I refer to the insufficient police protection.

I was present at the Tech-Western game and am reasonably sure the attendance was close to 4,000 spectators. During the first half of the game I saw not a single policeman and it was not until the half was over that I finally did see one, and that was when a hundred or more of the spectators were grouped together on the playing field. I then saw the lone officer when he came up and waved that group of persons away.

If there had been a sufficient number of policemen on hand, there would have been no disorder of any kind. The mere sight of policemen at such a place has great effect and significance. The school authorities have testified that they had on numerous occasions asked the police department for protection but it was never given. The student body of the high schools are blamed for the trouble and we hear no complaint by the superintendent or the assistant superintendent of our schools, or the now discredited Board of Education, to the Board of District Commissioners for this lack of cooperation by the police.

A SPECTATOR.

Washington, Nov. 11.

The Post Impressionist

Post Office, Wednesday.

DODDRICK has a new car. And he's in trouble with the police.

But the police don't know the worst.

Doddrick—we give him that alias to hide his shame—bought the car over a week ago. However, he works for himself, so he doesn't get Saturdays off. He is an eminently respectable and rapidly rising lawyer at the bar of the District of Columbia, who sets his reputation and his future above everything else. Therefore, he works seven days a week. And therefore, he didn't get a chance to give his new car a real tryout until Sunday.

Then, at last, he set forth to enjoy himself. Bound nowhere in particular—just going—he started from Washington ere dawn, in order to cover considerable distance before the Sunday parade should make the autumnal highways look like Fourteenth and E streets at 5 p. m. But, for the first few hours, he rigidly regarded that manufacturers' notice, pasted on his windshield, which warned him against any comfortable speed until he had covered (perhaps a month hence) an unconscionable number of miles.

Nevertheless, the car was a lovely thing. She—it——

(We have never been sure about the gender of "automobile." The problem probably depends upon the behavior of the particular car and the temper of the driver.)

——she purred out of the District. She hummed to herself through the lovely farm-country of Maryland. . .

Doddrick began humming, too. The car was so satisfactory, so responsive, that he was at peace with all the world. More: she made him want all the world to be as contented as he was. She soothed him to a charitable state of mind.

By the time Doddrick had crossed the Mason and Dixon Line and was nearing the wooded valley of the Susquehanna, he would not, had he been a Congressman, have had the heart to break a single pre-election promise.

That was why he took aboard, just beyond York, a stranger who thumbed at him. The self-invited passenger was a gentlemanly, well-dressed fellow of about thirty, with an intelligent face.

"Going to Lancaster?"

Doddrick now thought he'd go to Harrisburg. But he'd be glad to take the stranger as far as the parting of their ways at Columbia.

And then the guest proceeded to win Doddrick's enthusiasm by his own enthusiasm for the new car. He estimated her speed potentialities. He insinuated testing them. He said speed was really good for a new car, and he'd bet this one could do as much as——

In short, he soon had Doddrick doing 65.

They were doing 75 when, along about Wrightsville, a motor policeman overhauled them.

The ensuing conversation was the one usual in such circumstances, and as it progressed both Doddrick and his passenger got out of the car. But the lawyer's protest was, of course, useless. He could "tell that to the judge." The officer wrote the license number on a ticket and on its stub in his ticket book, handed the ticket to Doddrick and lingered only a moment longer while the guest held him with unavailing pleas. Then, far more slowly than before, the new car ran on toward Wrightsville.

"If I were you," said the stranger, "I'd tear up that ticket and forget about it. They'll never go away down to Washington to get you."

Doddrick was shocked. He had his reputation, his future, to think of, and besides, he just wasn't the kind of lawyer that could forget a legal summons.

"Aw," the stranger argued, "what's the difference?"

"You mustn't even suggest such things," said Doddrick, severely. "If you do it again, I'll have to ask you to walk the rest of the way to Columbia."

His passenger relapsed into absolute silence.

It wasn't broken until the Susquehanna had been crossed and Columbia reached, when, their roads here separating, the stranger descended from the automobile. Thereupon, however, he remarked:

"I'm much obliged for the lift—but I do think you'd better forget that ticket. Take my word for it, they can't ever find you."

He drew something from the pocket of his coat and tossed it to Doddrick.

It was the traffic policeman's summons-book and contained the stubs of all the tickets he had that morning issued to speeders. . . .

"How—how," demanded Doddrick when he recovered breath—"how did you ever get hold of this?"

"Listen, brother," said the unperturbed stranger, "I've been a dip—a pickpocket—for 15 years. I figured I owed you this for having got you pinched. And it was one of the easiest snitches I ever made in all my life. Oh, you needn't feel for your watch and your wallet! Do you think I'd frisk a friend?"

And then he jumped on to a passing trolley-car bound for Lancaster.

Peace Policy Keeps Sweden Out of Wars

Many Industries Have Won Important Place in World Markets.

By J. C. Rocca.
(Special Correspondence of The Post).

ACCORDING to Mr. Ira Nelson Morris, American Minister to Sweden during the World War, who wrote a book of reminiscences about his legation, the average American's conception of Sweden could probably be summed up something like this: "Sweden is a little country way up in the north of Europe, where all men are named either Ole or Oscar and all the women Hulda or Lena. The country is covered with snow and ice most of the time and the people live on stockfish and hard black bread."

However, a Swedish-American motion-picture star Greta Garbo, rendered a great service to her native country by accepting a role to represent Queen Christina of Sweden in the picture of the same name that recently was acclaimed in all American theaters. The public could not but be impressed by the fact that a queen of a small country took a leading part in the affairs of Europe, promoted peace both with Denmark and Germany, and patronized learning. I venture to say that the reputation of Sweden as a country of advanced civilization, has been enhanced by such an artist as Greta Garbo no less than by the useful inventions of John Ericsson or by the scientific and humanitarian work of Alfred Nobel.

Last week, a hearing was held at the Tariff Commission here, at which American interests presented their views in regard to the imminent commercial negotiations with Sweden. In view also of the efforts recently made by England and Germany to win a fresh hold upon the Swedish market by concluding special trade pacts, it may be of interest to analyze the present economic situation of that country.

• • • •

SWEDEN presents a striking contrast to the troubled neighboring countries, like Russia or Germany. Especially on arriving in Stockholm, after visiting Russia, the traveler is delighted by the comfortable hotels, the highly developed network of internal communications, the orderly movement in the harbor, and the noticeable well-being of the people, as well as by the lack of military processions. Sweden has kept aloof from wars for more than a century.

In 1919 Sweden consented to let the League of Nations settle its claim to the Aland Island, just off the coast near Stockholm, and peacefully accepted their award to Finland. In 1932, the question whether the American Government had detained two Swedish motorships during the World War in contravention of existing treaties was decided in favor of the United States by a Swiss lawyer, Mr. Borel, as the arbitrator.

The foreign policy of Sweden aims at a peaceful settlement of all disputes, parliamentary government in that country is developing peacefully by virtue of a long tradition of separation between the executive, legislative and judicial powers. During the last two years, the government has been in the hands of the Socialist Party. On November 1, when a daughter was born to Princess Sybilla of the royal family, Sweden witnessed the unusual spectacle of a Social-Democratic government holding a special meeting to name the new princess.

The present written constitution of Sweden dates from 1809, being the oldest written constitution now in force except that of the United States. The great progress made by Sweden in every field during the last century is the best example of the results that can be obtained by maintaining free institutions nothwithstanding the extraordinary situation created by the World War and by the depression.

The population of Sweden of about 6,000,000 inhabitants is almost equally divided in the pursuit of agriculture on the one hand and commerce and industry on the other. The majority of Swedes who emigrated to America were farmers, but Sweden is a highly industrialized country. Next to Russia, it is the chief lumber producer of Europe; and the Swedish iron and steel industry, the principal industry of the country, is organized with a view to the manufacture of high quality material. According to the last "world economic survey" of the League of Nations, Sweden is the first in a list of 18 countries arranged in order of industrial recovery, based on the percentage increase of industrial production from 1932 to 1934.

BESIDES the specialized metallurgical industry, there are many other Swedish industries which have achieved a high reputation in the markets of the world, such as paper manufactures, porcelains, textiles, foodstuffs and matches. A factor which came to be of greatest importance in Swedish match production was the presence of aspen wood in the country, a type of wood which became indispensable in the manufacture of matches by reason of its natural qualities (freedom from knots, ready combustibility), and the ease with which it could be worked. Under the influence of the international banker and financier, Ivar Kreuger, the Swedish Match Trust controlled for a certain time the match production of the world, but after the suicide of Mr. Kreuger and the sensational collapse of his bank in March, 1932, the industry was reorganized on a national basis.

Sweden was the first European country to recognize American independence; a commercial treaty laying the basis of the friendly and increasingly profitable commerce between Sweden and the United States was signed in 1783, at the suggestion of Benjamin Franklin, then U. S. Commissioner in France. But in announcing the future commercial negotiations, the Department of State declared that: "Trade between the United States and Sweden has fallen to almost one-third of the value it represented in 1929. Our exports to Sweden in 1929 amounted to $58,703,501 but had declined to $18,597,580 in 1933, while Swedish exports to the United States, which were valued at $52,985,698 in 1929, were worth only $30,972,309 in 1933."

• • • •

THE Journal of Commerce recently remarked that although many advocates of a managed currency often cite Sweden as a prime example of what can be accomplished by such a system, this interpretation is decidedly fallacious. "As a matter of fact, the Swedish kroner has been pegged to the pound sterling, and for the past year the sterling exchange rate has remained stable at 19.40 kroner to the pound. And the general price index has remained more or less stable, fluctuating during the last two years between 105 and 114."

We have to admit that since the Kreuger crash the question of tightening the state's control over the banking system has been brought to the forefront in Sweden, and a new bank act, establishing inspection by the government at least every other year, entered into force in January, 1934. It is also true that the experiment of curing depression by government expenditures on public works has been tried in Sweden as well as in the United States.

In the last two years, the loans to be devoted to public works amounted to 280,000,000 kroner, and the Socialist government has imposed new heavy inheritance taxes, the receipts from which are to be set off against the capital cost of the public works program. But the basic position of Sweden's finance is relatively strong; the national debt amounted in June, 1934, to 2,235,000,000 kroner (a decrease of 24,000,000 kroner in comparison with June, 1933) and no less than 80 per cent of the state bonds are held within the country.

Along the Potomac

With Carlisle Bargeron

Mr. Abe Mickal (POS).

SO many college and university heads have long since come to look upon good football teams as the way to advertise their schools that it is doubtful if the authorities of Louisiana State University will have a full appreciation of just what Mr. Abe Mickal has done for them. The fact is, however, that his action in rebuffing Huey Long has given L. S. U. a definite place in the sun. I'll venture the prediction that thousands of fathers are wondering about a school that in this day and time teaches a youngster to keep his feet on the ground.

BARGERON

Seriously, I am quite stirred up about this action of Mr. Mickal. It is phenomenal in these days and times. It may mean the turning point in the Youth Movement which our liberal writers have described as "thinking" on the part of the youngsters but which many a gray-haired father would label: most anything else.

• • • •

When one realizes just what this youngster has given up he will have a fuller appreciation of his contribution to modern affairs. Huey Long, for no reason at all, wanted to make him a State senator. As we measure things these days it was the opportunity of a lifetime. He could have written a book telling about what a wonderful experiment Russia is, he could have contributed to the smart magazines on the passing of the "old order" and how the world must look to effervescent youth for the solution of its problems. I know of a newspaper chain that would have paid him well for the story of his life. He could have gone into vaudeand then to Hollywood.

Under the circumstances, for him to say "no" to Huey's ballyhoo and to return quietly to his studies is as sensational as the news of a man biting a dog.

• • • •

It was certainly not what we had reason to expect of him. Why, I fully expected him to blossom forth as the leader of a student body, something like the NSU or the NSA, or whatever that association of young intellectuals is called. There are a few schools where strikes are not in progress. He could have organized strikes in these and then, with Huey Long behind him, he could have brought all of the striking student bodies together for one grand striking debauch. Taking into consideration his patron saint, there would have been no limit to how far young Mickal could go.

His action is really incredible. Is it possible that the students of L. S. U. are spiritless, that they let old fogies inculcate them with a discipline? Stuck off down there in Louisiana, away from Columbia and the rest of our more "advanced" schools, is it possible that they are stifling thought on the part of the youngsters? It must be this, because, I am sure, had it been at another school not only would Mikal have proudly and with a fitting oration accepted Huey's offer, but the student body would have left its studies and stormed the Senate chamber to see him sworn in. And the educators would have said: "Youth is certainly thinking these days."

• • • •

As it is, I expect to see a decidedly increased enrollment at L. S. U. next year. Distressed fathers will want literature on this school. Many of them, instead of working and saving to send the boy off to college as in the past, had come to dread his entering upon this so-called great thinking movement which our leading institutions have been encouraging. If thinking is what the youngsters have been really doing, there are many fathers who are utterly opposed to it, who yearn for the good old days of no thinking, instead.

Unquestionably, I am too enthusiastic about young Mr. Mikal, but somehow I see him, in these days of so much thinking, as the deliverer of the race. I think he deserves a degree right now, before he finishes school. He should have the very rare degree of P. O. S.—Possessor of Sense.

New Faces in the Senate — — A. Harry Moore, New Jersey

He Would Rather Break Third Term Rule Than Be Senator.

This is the fifth of a series of sketches of the newly elected United States Senators especially written for The Post by competent observers. Another will appear in this space tomorrow.

By Edward M. Gilroy.
(Political Writer, Newark Evening News.)
Newark, N. J.

OF all the United States Senators elected November 6, Gov. A. Harry Moore, Democrat, of New Jersey, probably is alone in that he had no desire or ambition to sit in the Senate. Although Gov. Moore defeated Senator Hamilton F. Kean, Old Guard Republican, by 220,000 votes, he literally had to be forced to run. Gov. Moore is completing his second term as chief executive and his mind had been set upon running again in 1937, the New Jersey constitution preventing a governor succeeding himself.

New Jersey never has elected a Governor to three terms and it is Moore's ambition to be that man. Upon leaving office in January, the Governor's plan was to retire to private life for three years, practise law and make himself available for 1937. Now he realizes that to run three years from now he would have to resign from the Senate and that the voters might not take kindly to such a move.

Only under the most insistent pressure from Mayor Frank Hague of Jersey City, New Jersey Democratic leader, was Moore persuaded to run against Senator Kean. Mayor Hague was desperate to have Moore head the ticket to aid the candidacy of William L. Dill for Governor. The Governorship means everything to the Hague organization, for it is the chief source of patronage, the Democrats having no control over the Legislature.

• • • •

DILL'S opponent was Harold G. Hoffman, young motor vehicle commissioner and a former Representative. Hague figured that Moore, who carried New Jersey for Governor in 1931 by 232,000, the greatest plurality any Democrat ever received in the State, would pull Dill through. So Gov. Moore finally was forced into the Senate race, on the plea of party loyalty, despite repeated public statements that he would not run.

The Hague organization was overjoyed. Moore had Kean beaten before the campaign started and the Governor devoted all his campaigning to helping Dill. Kean's name or candidacy never was mentioned. Moore was elected Senator by a tremendous vote, carrying 16 of the 21 counties. But Dill ran far behind, carrying only 4 counties, and Hoffman was elected Governor by 11,000, the closest margin since woman's suffrage doubled the vote.

Now Senator-elect Moore is heading for Washington to a job he does not like, his ambition to be Governor for a third term slipping away, and his law business in New Jersey standing to suffer from his absence. Without the means of many other Senators, and with a desire for a simple life that is shared by Mrs. Moore, the new Senator from New Jersey will not get the thrill from the opening of Congress that many other newcomers will experience.

Another factor is that as Senator, Moore will be in a difficult position. Hague is tolerated but not liked by the Roosevelt Administration. The President has not forgotten that at Chicago, Hague, as campaign manager for Alfred E. Smith, declared Roosevelt was the weakest candidate in the Democratic Party and that he would not carry a State east of the Mississippi.

• • • •

SENATOR-ELECT MOORE himself is acceptable to the President, it is believed, since they were friendly before the Chicago convention. Moore did not go to the convention, letting an alternate vote against Roosevelt, and the Governor tried to persuade Hague to join the Roosevelt movement. Yet at Washington Moore will be under pressure to produce jobs for the Hague organization, which the Administration does not want to give Hague. This situation is indicated clearly by the fact that a Republican United States marshal and Republican district attorney are still serving in New Jersey while Hague's candidates stand by, hoping.

As Senator, Moore is entering a new field, for he never had legislative experience. He started his career in Jersey City ward politics and became secretary to Mayor H. Otto Wittpenn, enemy of Hague.

A. HARRY MOORE.

Moore entered the city commission campaign and was the only anti-Hague man elected. Deprived of jobs and prestige by Hague's men, Moore was high man when re-elected and Hague decided he was too good a vote-getter to remain on the opposite side. From that day on Moore became Hague's meal ticket, giving Hague control of the governorship for six of the last nine years.

Well advised while Governor, Moore will be more on his own in Washington. A great campaigner and an accomplished orator, Senator-elect Moore is likely to find it irksome to vote as part of the great Democratic majority with little chance to say anything. That Moore will go along with the entire Roosevelt program is almost a certainty, as he pledged himself to that in the campaign and Hague himself is doing everything possible to reinstate himself with the President. Moore is on record for repeal of the Federal gasoline tax and is a strong State's rights advocate, as are many other governors. But he can be counted upon to support the Administration all the way.

• • • •

AS Governor, Moore came into national prominence during the Lindbergh kidnaping case; the move by Georgia to extradite Robert Elliott Burns, chain-gang fugitive; and in the recent Morro Castle disaster.

When Charles Augustus Lindbergh, jr., was kidnaped at Hopewell, a few miles from the State House at Trenton, Gov. Moore called in officials of the State police and those of the Newark and Jersey City departments and coordinated all three into a unit, displacing the haphazard running down of clews that prevailed during the first day of the search. The Governor went further and arranged what amounted to a national mobilization of crime detecting agencies to work on the case.

The Governor was just as quick to work with Col. Lindbergh. Reports reached the Governor that Lindbergh felt the police were hindering him in his efforts to communicate with the kidnapers. The Governor then offered to call off the entire hunt for 48 hours if Lindbergh desired it, but the flier, after consulting with friends, decided against it.

Headquarters for newspapermen were set up in the Governor's office to make certain they would be available for any developments. For a time this worked well, but as the case dragged on the Governor was obliged to set up a new headquarters. He assigned superior officers of the State police to aid the newspapermen.

When Lindbergh complained of the publicity as hindering police work, the Governor called the reporters to his office.

"You fellows helped a lot the first few days," the Governor said, "but unless you cut down some of these wild stories you will hamper our work. Why not take it easy for a few days." The point was made and there was better feeling between police and the press afterward.

• • • •

GOV. MOORE also was responsible for New Jersey offering $25,000 reward for arrest of the kidnapers, a reward that probably will be paid when the trial of Bruno Richard Hauptmann is concluded. Recently the Governor won the gratitude of the citizens of Hunterdon County, the rural section which has to bear the cost of the Hauptmann trial. On motion of the Governor, the State House Commission appropriated $15,000 toward the trial costs with promise of more later, thus saving Hunterdon residents the burden of additional taxation.

Gov. Moore is courageous and will stand by his guns when sure he is right. Despite pressure from Georgia officials for return of Burns, an escaped chain gang prisoner, the Governor refused to sign extradition papers on the ground that Burns could not be given a fair trial in Georgia because of the attendant publicity. This move, questionable as it may have been from a legal standpoint, emphasized again Gov. Moore's sympathy for the underdog.

Fifty-five years old, his once red hair now silver, Senator-elect Moore is slim and in fine physical condition. He was aroused from sleep when the Morro Castle was heading toward the Jersey coast almost opposite the summer capital at Sea Girt. Half dressed, Moore ran from the mansion across the parade ground to the National Guard aviation unit and was flown five miles to sea.

The Governor leaned from the cockpit and pointed with a red flag at survivors struggling in the water so that lifeboat crews from the Monarch of Bermuda could pick them up. So high were the seas that the lifeboat crews could not pick out the drowning in the early morning light, but many unquestionably owe their lives to the Governor's action. A steward came to Trenton last week to pay his thanks in person and said he was ready to sink when the plane swooped over his head and gave him courage.

• • • •

AN accomplished horseman, Senator-elect Moore plans to ride almost daily at Washington. His riding is the bane of existence for his military staff. No matter how late the party or how bad the weather, Gov. Moore is ready to ride early every morning during his summer stay at Sea Girt and many a colonel or captain has had hard work to stay in the saddle accompanying him.

• • • •

Both the Governor and Mrs. Moore spend much of their time and money on charitable enterprises. The Governor established the first school for crippled children in the country in Jersey City and is more proud of its bearing his name than any other accomplishment. Each Christmas he dresses as Santa Claus and distributes presents to the crippled children, and at Easter, no matter what other engagements he has, pays another visit, loaded with gifts. Mrs. Moore is president of the Red Cross in Jersey City.

Exceedingly democratic, the Governor and Mrs. Moore have countless friends in New Jersey. At the summer capital they entertained visitors regardless of party affiliations and insisted upon Senator Kean and Mr. Hoffman, the Republican candidates, staying for luncheon at a Democratic campaign rally last summer. At Washington they will make friends easily and never get upstage.

Cambridge (Eng.)

By Wm. Lyon Phelps

TO all who are interested in the history, appearance, government, customs of the ancient University of Cambridge, I most heartily recommend a little book that has just been published called "Introduction to Cambridge," by S. C. Roberts, M. A., fellow of Pembroke College. It answers practically all the questions that would naturally come from inquisitive Americans.

• • • •

Mr. Roberts has a gift in condensation that is rather remarkable. All the necessary information is given, and yet in an attractive manner. It is not at all a dry manual. He fulfills the promise in his preface: "A simple account of how the University of Cambridge has come, in the course of seven centuries, to be what it is today, to present a picture, in outline, of the working of the present academic system, from the points of view both of the don and of the undergraduate, and to show, in particular, the close interdependence of university and college both in teaching and in administration."

Apart from the value of the general information, a book like this has an especial interest at this moment because both Harvard and Yale, in following the "college plan," have approached in more than a few ways the system at Oxford and Cambridge.

In the year 1209 the university at Cambridge (in a primitive form, of course) was in existence. The first Cambridge College was Peterhouse, the only one founded in the thirteenth century. But in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries more and more colleges appeared, each one with its own peculiar features.

• • • •

In the system of instruction it seems to me that the college tutors must all be sadly overworked. They give so much individual instruction that I do not see where they find any time for their own work. Of course, at Cambridge the combined three terms fill only half the year, and I suppose during the other six months the tutors are able to carry on their own researches, but it is the custom at Cambridge for "honour" students to spend much of the long vacation in residence, and if the tutors were there also, they would be too easily accessible for their own comfort.

This little book describes the daily life of the undergraduate, taken up by his studies, lectures, social engagements and athletics.

Nearly all the great poets went to Cambridge—Spenser, Marlowe, Milton, Herrick, Dryden, Gray, Wordsworth, Coleridge, Byron, Tennyson. To a lover of literature, Cambridge is holy ground.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Getting After Those Auto Horns.

At last a peace movement that may amount to something is under way. The American Automobile Association has launched a campaign to end unnecessary automobile horn tooting.

• • • •

Following drastic drives in England, France and Germany, a fight against driving entirely by ear is to be waged in the United States.

• • • •

It's a long overdue battle. Ninety-nine out of every 100 automobile drivers think a car should be operated entirely by horn.

• • • •

There are autoists in this country who think a horn is a substitute for steering wheel, brakes and clutch.

• • • •

London has led all population centers in the war against streamline disturbances by making it illegal to sound a horn between 11:30 p. m. and 7 a. m.

• • • •

The American Automobile Association is urging cities all over the country to do something about ridding motorists of the notion that a $3.89 horn constitutes an alibi for manslaughter, a free pass through heavy traffic and a musical instrument that becomes defective if not constantly played.

• • • •

Thousands of lives a year would be saved if motorists were made to realize that an electric button is not to be regarded as a badge of superiority.

• • • •

Take away his sound devices and the average automobilist would have to take driving lessons.

• • • •

And that's what he needs.

• • • •

He buys a car for its disturbance value and turns it in as soon as the horn gets weak.

• • • •

Even the city vehicles are offenders. The fire apparatus always makes more noise coming back than going to a fire, and even ambulances are run by drivers who think the sick react favorably to nervous breakdowns in transit.

• • • •

How about a start in our city? Or must we go on wearing earlaps forever?

Anglo-American Unity Visible in London Fog

Common Purpose, Echoed by Gen. Smuts, Is Now Clear; Reality, Not a Gesture.

By Elliott Thurston.

OUT of the mists overhanging the preliminary naval conversations at London one fact is emerging with steadily increasing clarity.

Whether or not Japan can be kept within a continuing accord, the United States and Great Britain must face the uncertain future together, not apart.

There is the best of reason for believing that President Roosevelt strongly adheres to this viewpoint, which has previously been expressed by such leaders of British thought as J. L. Garvin and is now even more vigorously repeated by Gen. Jan Christian Smuts, minister of justice of the Union of South Africa. Gen. Smuts is much more than a spokesman for British dominions. His influence is great throughout the British commonwealth and far beyond. He is recognized as one of the world's most enlightened statesmen.

Speaking before the Royal Institute of International Affairs, in London on Monday night, Gen. Smuts declared that whatever comes of the unpromising negotiations now in progress Great Britain and the United States must face "the unknown future" together, not divided.

It is notable that the London Times, commenting on the speech, regretted that "an address so perspicacious, so wise and so imaginative, yet so plainly derived from hard experience in politics and war, should not have come from the lips of a member of our own cabinet."

For at the same moment, Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald felt it necessary to issue an official denial of rumors that the British government was secretly negotiating with Japan for a separate understanding which would be a special advantage to British trade.

• • • •

FROM the outset of the London conversations it has been only too apparent that some British groups might be persuaded that the trade advantages to be gained from making a separate bargain with the Japanese would outweigh the benefits to be expected from attempting to maintain accord with the United States. There has been little enough historically and recently to hearten those British leaders who would have the United States and Great Britain march together.

The impasse over the war debts, the Johnson act which would preclude the British but not the Japanese from our capital markets in case of war, and the first proposal of the American naval delegates for a large horizontal cut in navies are recent examples of American policy which discourages the advocates of Anglo-American accord and encourages the bargain-hunters in Great Britain as well as in Japan. For the United States to propose, seriously, a sharp reduction of the British fleet in the face of the situation on the Continent, to say nothing of the Far East, was enough by itself to dismay the handiest proponents of understanding and accord.

However, Gen. Smuts, looking beyond the vexations of incidental policy, faced the larger realities with striking frankness and firmness. While he urged "everything possible in the power of diplomacy be done to avoid the appearance of antagonism between the East and the West," he continued:

"We are facing the greatest, the most intriguing and the most testing human situation which probably has ever arisen in history. It may well be that Western civilization will stand or fall in this matter of contact with the immense human masses of the East. Even if the present negotiations fail, do not let us depart from an attitude of friendliness and large human good will toward Japan."

• • • •

BUT, he declared, renewal of an Anglo-Japanese alliance would be a mistake, and he added:

"This is a difficult world, in which we have to walk warily, in which even good will may not be enough and in which we are called upon to exercise a wise discretion as an insurance for the future. In this spirit, I would say that to me the future policy and association of our great British commonwealth lie more with the United States than with any other group in the world.

"If ever there comes a parting of the ways; if ever in any crisis of the future we are called upon to make a choice, the United States, it seems to me, should be the company we should prefer to walk with and march with to the unknown future. On that path lie our past affiliations, our common moral outlook and our hopes and fears for the future of our common civilization.

"Nobody can forecast the outcome of the stormy era of history on which we are now probably entering. Our best insurance in this unknown territory is to be with those with whom we have instinctive and historic sympathy."

Come what may at London, it is clear that controlling opinion on this side of the Atlantic and the most statesmanlike opinion on the other side have but one answer to the challenge to Anglo-American identity of purpose and national interest. It is no mere gesture to intimidate the Japanese. It is perhaps the most important reality in the troubled world of international affairs today.

No End of Books

Sybil Bolitho Outdoes Novelties With a Novel From Life; Mystery and Light Fiction.

By Theodore Hall.

YESTERDAY I brought up the matter of a "broom" in fiction, something to do more for the dust in our lives than to push it into a corner or drench it down with rose-water. The question as to what this was I left hanging in the air like an echo. But rest assured the "broom" is no "ism" at all, and last of all, money—though most fiction would have it so.

Just what it is will be clear in lightning-like flashes from the heart of Sybil Bolitho's novel, "My Shadow As I Pass" (Viking, $2.50). Largely, the tale records a woman's sorrow for the death of her husband. I am sorry to report that great quantities of oh-the-pain-of-it-all are tedious to the reader, simply because the situation is left more or less generalized until the middle of the book. But when, by back-tracking, the author shows us Helen and John in their life together, the book takes on stature and genuine emotional power at once. The cascades of joy in their rich and happy companionship resemble nothing so much as the married life of D. H. and Frieda Lawrence.

Now I should like to leave it at that, with praise for the author's imaginative and constructive insight into life. But the facts are that Mrs. Bolitho Ryall is fictionizing her memories of the late William Bolitho (Ryall was his proper surname, Bolitho his middle name, used as a nom de plume), that gaunt Afrikander who stalked through the literary worlds of London and New York leaving the air behind him charged with sparks of genius—or at least, near-genius.

But if you think that the contagious happiness in this biography-novel stems from that genius, and hence must remain remote from the rest of us, it just goes to show how dusty are the noses of ninety-nine hundredths of the true novelists who write about our time.

• • • •

In mystery stories, don't miss Rex Stout's "Fer-de-Lance" (Farrar & Rinehart, $2)—a yarn in which that fat, indolent, beer-drinking and orchid-raising detective, Nero Wolfe, sends his minions out to do the footwork while he sits at home and solves it all. Problem is a college president who dies from a poisoned needle shot out of the end of a golf club. An ingenious tale, with a lot of humor, too.

• • • •

Helen Reilly, in "The Line-Up" (Crime Club, $2), follows Inspector McKee, of Center street (the Scotland Yard of New York) on his second case—double murder by sedatives. I liked it especially for the picture of a whole modern police force working together. Good going.

Whitman Chambers' "Murder for a Wanton" (Crime Club, $2) pictures death in a tough road-house, solved by a reporter. Swift and hard-boiled, but rather strained.

Edward Hale Bierstadt is a connoisseur of real murders, and a collector of their data. In "Enter Murderers" (Doubleday Doran, $2.50) he tells the true stories of eight American cases between the years 1826 and 1877. If you want the salt of fact in your horror stories, here it is in plenty.

"The Pale Survivor," by Mary Louise Mable (Bobbs-Merrill, $2.50). Costume drama featuring a red-headed siren in the time of Morgan the Pirate.

• • • •

"The Daughters of Richard Heron," by Romilly Cavan (Dutton, $2.50). An English playwright and his three very modern daughters. Lively in a nice way.

• • • •

"The Great Mr. Knight," by Dorothy Whipple (Farrar & Rinehart, $2.50). When the wealthy financier enters into the life of the modest Blake family, he makes them all wealthy—always great fun to read about.

• • • •

"True by the Sun," by Lida Larrimore (Macrae-Smith, $2). A romance about the college graduate who was voted "most likely to succeed."

• • • •

"The Bright Mirror," by Francine Findley (King, $2). The gal can't decide between three suitors. There you have it.

• • • •

"With Banners," by Emilie Loring (Penn, $2). The young couple have a feud over a will, and then love makes everything right.

• • • •

"Love Without Breakfast," by Eunice Chapin (King, $2). The ex-showgirl tries to save her stepdaughter from the perils of the big city.

• • • •

"The Radiant Tree," by Temple Bailey (Penn, $2). Short stories from the big-paying magazines, by a woman who earns it.

Way Proposed To Banish Lone Turkey Eater

Tables for Four or Eight at Cafes Suggested on Thanksgiving.

By Kay Ware.

Here's an idea for Thanksgiving. A letter has sifted into The Post-office that might be of interest to restaurant owners, proprietors of those country tea houses, cocktail lounges and informal dining rooms.

The writer wanted to know if it were possible to get in touch with a group of people, who, being far away from their families, could enjoy a Thanksgiving dinner together. There are probably in Washington, hundreds of lonely folks who would welcome an opportunity to get acquainted through the hospitality of tea room hostesses and owners. There are many who, rather than eat a solitary dinner at a restaurant, would like to share the companionship of others, and there are many suburban tea rooms and local dining rooms where such an arrangement would be possible.

Perhaps, in different sections of the city, restaurant hostesses would set aside a few tables for four, or eight, for the purpose of making Thanksgiving a bit more pleasant for lonely patrons. As if it were her home, the hostess could introduce and place her guests at these tables; the turkey would taste better if there were someone to talk to; the pumpkin pie would take on the flavor of home cooking in almost a "home atmosphere."

What do you think of the idea?

Here's the new Shoreham show: Julanne Johnson and the Rockey twins, two men and a girl with ballroom dances. Their numbers include a waltz, soft-shoe number and what they call "Proximity Novelty Dance." Hum. It is a novelty? They are of musical comedy fame, also RKO and Hollywood productions.

Truly Malina, singer, is a character actress besides. Does French bits and other foreign tunes. John Hale, tenor, continues. Emily von Losen, blonde dancer, orchestra and Bernee complete the bill.

Across the lobby you'll find "Tiny" singing in the lounge in the afternoons. Tiny is the large gentleman with the small piano. He's one of the funniest things that has hit Washington in a long time. Songs are continental. Something you'll not write home about.

Club Michel holds over last week's show. Frank McCormick is master of ceremonies and introduces Esther and Hazleton, dance team; Ruth Kidd, once Miss New York, with songs; Jerry O'Brien, a New York model, and fighter for an NRA code; and Glenda Jones, dancer.

Homer Zircle directs the orchestra, Dave Crocker plays accordion, and Phil Diamond sings.

Details about Hi-Hat's entertainers: Manuel Bofril, leader of the Filipinos, can play 14 different stringed instruments, an old-fashioned hand saw, and coaxes tunes from an Hawaiian steel guitar with one hand. Vincent Bofril, his brother, supplies the rhythm for the quartet on a bass guitar; Glicerio Serna, featured singer, imitates Rudy Vallee, Bing Crosby and others; Tony Avila, the Filipino Cab Calloway, plays Harlem ditties on another guitar.

Get acquainted with Frank McNey, the host. He'll tell you what to order next, if you're in doubt.

Pete Macias grins because the cast of "Ah, Wilderness" forgets O'Neill long enough to remember Heigh-Ho. Several of the stars were there Monday night.

Maxine has a new set of tunes. Archie Hawk continues to look goofy and dances.

Marty Rubin and Jimmy Nichols have gathered several new songs to vocalize during and between dance sessions. The orchestra is introducing several songs from new shows, notably "Maria" from "Revenge with Music" (Libby Holman's show), "Nevermore" from Noel Coward's "Conversation Piece" and Cole Porter's "All the Night."

Glad to hear that somebody took the hint about the De Sales Tavern. It's to open soon, it seems.

And at last Club Habana fixes the definite date of November 28 as its opening. Understand they have a removable roof, that will keep you cozy in winter, and will roll away and reveal the sky in warm weather. Clouds float across the ceiling, atmosphere is very Mexican.

The Lee Ballroom at the George Mason Hotel in Alexandria opens on November 28, too. Bookings have been made for a well known radio star, and prominent theatrical personages. Brooke Johns will be present to add entertainment with his banjo. Percy Crosby, father of "Skippy," has been invited.

Heading the list of distinguished guests are Gov. and Mrs. George C. Peery. Reservations are being made.

Color scheme is to be buff and blue, including the uniforms of the waitresses.

Seventeen Broadway entertainers stop off at the Lotus this week. Lester and Daniels, dance team, are from the Casino de Paree, Paradise and Hollywood restaurants. Eddie Ray has just finished an engagement at the Hotel Adelphia. The Continentals introduce new and many dance steps.

The Capitolians, led by Bill Strickland, Judy Ellington, the little singer, round out the bill.

There are three complete shows a day.

La Paree has a mistress of ceremonies who is efficient and attractive. Ginger Dewlow takes over the introducing and presents: La Costa, Carlita and Marie, European dance team that interprets Cuban nights. The trio have worked together in the principal cities of the world for 13 years.

The Ritzy Rhythm Girls—Vessie Holmes, Ruth Raymond, Dee Lores, Helen Mane, Madeline Starrett and Beth Renouf—do their parts. Miss Starrett offers a waltz; Miss Renouf, a modernistic number; Miss Mane, a Harlem dance.

Ought to hear Marie Fowler's arrangement of "Rolling in Love." Ray Beck brings applause, as does the orchestra under Emory Daugherty.

The ship Constellation docked at the waterfront is an art work as well as an entertainment center. It has captured all the romance of the sea, and is the oldest sailing passenger vessel since the gold rush.

While you dance, you seem to feel the deck roll beneath your feet, the state rooms are like something out of a story book. The walls are paneled, the old beams are still in place.

They're planning a cruise later on and will take 50 passengers aboard.

Dancing to George Gaul's music from 9 o'clock on.

State Evidence In Hauptmann Case Attacked

Deliberate Withholding or Distorting Charged by Defense Lawyer.

Flemington, N. J., Nov. 13 (AP). Lloyd Fisher, associate defense counsel for Bruno Richard Hauptmann, said today the State is deliberately withholding or distorting evidence which would clear the Lindbergh kidnap-slaying suspect.

"If the State would publish the true report of the examination of the kidnap ladder by its wood expert it would show Hauptmann was not the builder," Fisher said. "Hauptmann could not have built the ladder for reasons which are obvious in the expert's report, bearing in mind that Hauptmann is a skilled carpenter."

Speaking of the State's announced intention to prove the kidnaping and slaying of the Lindbergh baby was the work of one man, Fisher said an examination of the grounds at the Lindbergh Hopewell estate had apparently revealed the footprints of three persons outside the home.

Hoax Trial Statements Cited.

Statements regarding these footprints were made by the prosecution at the hoax trial of John Hughes Curtis, Norfolk (Va.) shipbuilder, Fisher said. Fisher was Curtis' counsel.

The prosecution also stated at that time, Fisher said, that two sets of footprints had been discovered in St. Raymond's Cemetery, the Bronx, where the $50,000 ransom money was handed over by Dr. John F. Condon, intermediary in the ransom negotiations.

"If the State is truthful, it would say that none of the five sets of footprints match Hauptmann's," Fisher said.

"Despite their best efforts, the chisel found at the estate can not be traced to Hauptmann," he added.

"If they disclose the truth, they will say they can not trace the lumber in the ladder to the Bronx lumber yard, where they say Hauptmann purchased it.

Attorney Blames Gang.

"If they are consistent with everything they have done heretofore, they would show that the crime was the work of a gang and not of an individual.

"If they will tell the truth about the ransom notes, they would say the original note was in an entirely different hand than the others. It is the duty of the State to disclose these things for the protection of Hauptmann and not attempt to suppress or color evidence.

"If they can not establish his guilt, they are under obligation to ask for a dismissal of his indictment."

Mme. Prochnik Observes First At Home of Season

Debutante Daughter Assists in Receiving Guests at Reception in European Manner at the Austrian Legation.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

Mme. Prochnik, wife of the Minister of Austria, yesterday afternoon observed her first at home of the season, and in the European manner. Her debutante daughter, Miss Valerie Prochnik, received with her. The drawing room of the legation, lit with soft lights, and hung with rare old tapestries, was a fitting background for the two ladies, the mother looking scarcely older than her daughter in a gown of midnight blue velvet, fashioned with a long train and a soft collar and deep cuffs of silver and dark blue lame. Miss Prochnik wore a frock of pale apple-green sheer crepe, a color most becoming to her blonde type, and fashioned with a brief jacket trimmed with narrow bands of mink. Being one of the popular members of the younger set, she was not lacking the flowery tribute of some admirer, yesterday a huge corsage of gardenias and purple orchids.

The minister, who was present throughout the afternoon, greeted many of the guests as they went from the large drawing room, through the library and into the dining room where the tea table was set with candelabra, and a centerpiece of golden roses. Mrs. Claude A. Swanson, wife of the Secretary of the Navy, poured tea at one end of the table, while Mrs. William A. Scully served coffee. Mrs. Swanson wore an afternoon gown with a tunic of blue and silver lame, and Mrs. Scully was in a gown of bright green crepe with a smart hat of black velvet.

Debutantes Give Punch.

A group of this season's debutantes, including Miss Emily Maddox, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Amory Maddox, served punch and attracted many of the younger guests who gathered in the pleasant house for tea. Miss Maddox wore a frock of black velvet with a tunic blouse of pale gold lame. Miss Jane Esther Platt accompanied her father, Mr. Landra Platt, and Mrs. Platt. Miss Platt wore a costume of dark maroon crepe with a hat to match. Mrs. Platt was in black. Others glimpsed were Mrs. Robert V. Fleming, in a gown of black tulip crepe, with her daughter, Miss Dolly Fleming, a debutante of last season, who wore a frock of black crepe with a top of black and silver chiffon. Both wore small black velvet hats.

Mme. Peter, wife of the Minister of Switzerland, wearing a frock of bright scarlet crepe with touches of black, and a black hat, was seen chatting with Mrs. William R. Castle, jr., who wore a gown of dark brown with a hat to match. Mme. de Laboulaye was in a costume of seal brown with Persian lamb of the same shade used for trimming Mme. de Bianchi, wife of the Minister of Portugal, was in an ensemble of black, the coat trimmed with fox, and her hat, a high turban of black velvet.

The Secretary of War and Mrs. George H. Dern were accompanied by their daughter, Miss Betsy Dern, who wore a black crepe frock trimmed with collar and cuffs of white faille silk. Mr. and Mrs. J. Franklin Carter were present, the latter in a black frock with a tunic of gunmetal cloth, and a small black hat, and with them were the Counselor of the Polish Embassy and Mme. Sokolowska. Mr. and Mrs. William Cushman, who had entertained at a delightful dance last Friday evening, received "congratulations" on the "grand party" from all sides. Mrs. Cushman wore a frock of blue and silver metal cloth, and a black velvet hat with an enormously wide brim, and a cape of silver fox.

Senora de Yrujo, wife of the Minister-Counselor of the Spanish Embassy, was in a frock of brown satin fashioned on straight lines, with a smart brown felt hat to match. Mrs. Harry Wardman was accompanied by her daughter, Miss Helen Wardman, who wore a black velvet frock with a tiny Mandarin-shaped hat of velvet, and over all a mink coat. Mrs. Wardman was in a suit of block woolen, trimmed with narrow bands of Persian lamb and tied at the throat with gray velvet bows. Her hat was wide-brimmed and black.

Other Guests.

Others glimpsed were Mrs. Wilbur J. Carr, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Taliaferro, Capt. and Mrs. John P. Jackson, the latter wearing a handsome brown coat with a cape of sable; Mr. and Mrs. George Amory Maddox, Mrs. William Barrett Ridgely, Rear Admiral Emory S. Land, Rear Admiral and Mrs. Mark L. Bristol, the latter wearing a black velvet gown trimmed with ermine, and a small black hat with beautiful paradise feathers; Mr. and Mrs. Walter R. Tuckerman, Mr. Clarence Hewes, who has recently returned to his home on Massachusetts avenue after spending five months abroad; Miss Elisabeth Howry, Mrs. Sol Bloom, wearing a costume of brown, and Miss Vera Bloom in gray trimmed with krimmer fur to match; Mrs. Robert Whitney Imbrie in a black frock with a scarlet velvet bow, and a wide brimmed hat (they are apparently becoming the vogue); Mrs. James J. Davis, Baroness von Below, Mr. and Mrs. Chester A. Snow, Mrs. William T. Mann, Mrs. William S. Culbertson, Col. and Mrs. George C. Thorpe, and Mrs. Ralph Worthington, in an ensemble of pale gray trimmed with gray fox.

Deb's Diary

Who, What and Where —as She Sees It.

DEAR DIARY:

Yesterday morning a white square envelope arrived, containing an invitation to Mary Patterson's luncheon at the Mayflower December 4. I'm sure that it will be a merry affair, what with Mary the hostess and Mary (Kay Spinks) the honor guest.

T'other evening I saw Natalie Keeney, frocked in green and black at the Heigh-Ho, enjoying it all very much. Not many tables away sat Emily Maddox, wearing a smart green tunic and cute straight up and down hat of black.

Could that have been young Billy Mitchell on his way home from the Union Station Monday, smiling and chatting with his two companions in a dark red coupe? If not, then he too suffers from double-itis.

Making Muffs Is Latest Idea In Needlecraft

Process Is Simple With "Frames" Available at Store Here.

(During the absence of Miss Ruth Anne Davis, her column is being written by Katherine Smith.)

By Katherine Smith.

FASHION, like charity, begins at home. We're told to make our own knitted suits, our hats, our pocketbooks, and now the latest idea is: make your own muff.

That's not a bad idea either. While the newest suits and coats have muffs to match, it's hard to find a muff to match an outfit purchased last year.

So if you're clever with a needle and thread, go to it.

One store has muff "frames" all ready to be covered. They're nicely stuffed, have rings attached, are in several sizes and styles and will make the manufacture of a muff very simple. If you have a scrap of fur, a bit of velvet, a strip of bright lame or wool, all you need to do is get one of these uncovered muffs, and in a few hours you'll have just the type you need.

Only 59 cents.

Metal Hat and Shoe Racks.

Fishing your shoes out from under the bed isn't the most pleasant way to start the day. Finding your best hat squashed on the top closet shelf doesn't make you feel very happy either. So why not get one of these metal hat and shoe racks combined? It hangs on the closet door, has three racks for hats and three shelves for shoes.

It's really a skeleton of a rack, and each section collapses. The hat racks may be detached; the shoe shelves fold up close to the metal frame. It's a truly good buy for $1, and will save your clothes. The color is cream.

Flowers Identify Perfumes.

Most floral perfumes and toilet waters are identified only by labels and odor. However, the shopper saw some today that are identified by the flowers themselves. For instance: A bottle of rose scented water has a real little rosebud inside the bottle, "pickled," as it were, by the liquid contents. The effect is lovely. A lily of the valley and a bit of fern floats in green liquid; a daffodil in pale yellow, a violet in the lavender, and so on.

At first glance you'd think the flowers were artificial, but if you examine them closely you'll see the tiny veins, the delicate turn of the petals that prove they are real.

What a charming gift for a woman who loves dainty things! What a delightful ornament for your own dressing table

Tunic Blouses.

Need a tunic blouse? There are some grand ones in one store. They are wool, with a gleaming metal thread in them in a plaid effect. Several colors will aid your selection. Several styles insure a becoming purchase. Some have little handkerchief scarfs at the neck, belts are fastened with metal buckles. The material is very good, considering the low price—$1.95.

Manicure Sets.

Here's a chance to get a splendid manicure set for half a dollar. It includes an oily polish remover, cuticle oil, nail polish, cuticle remover, orange stick and nail white. Ladies who want lovely nails and have little time to spend at a beauty shop will want to have this set in a convenient bureau drawer. A few minutes a day, and your hands can be one of your best features.

Here's a desk in which to put your jewels. The desk is exactly the right size and will take up very little room on your dresser. It's about 4 inches high, has curved legs, like an old-fashioned piece. The top lifts up and the interior is velvet lined.

The desk itself is silver plated and is one of the quaintest boxes we've seen in a long while.

The Rise of the Zipper.

There's a movie going on in one store that illustrates the rise of the zipper. Particularly in the realm of baby clothes. It will show you how outdated the good old-fashioned button is and how science and manufacture go hand in hand to make life easier for baby's mother.

Lace Collar and Cuff Sets.

Some lovely point lace collar and cuff sets are to be classified among the "musts" of a wardrobe. One collar is like a big bib, narrow at the shoulders and broadening down the front into a large square. Very deep cuffs go with it. Stunning for black crepe of velvet dresses.

Another is a round style, fastened in front with a black velvet bow. It's almost Lord Fauntleroy-ish, and is as charming a piece of neckwear as you can find.

New Belts on Market.

Stylists say, "Watch your waistline!" And they don't mean you need to reduce; they mean you need the smartest of accessories—a new belt.

There are some very good ones selling at 39 cents each. Suede, patent leather and other materials are fastened with plain, fancy tailored and dressy buckles. In brown, navy, green and black. They'll dress up an old blouse, freshen last year's trusty black, add dash to the bargain sale tunic.

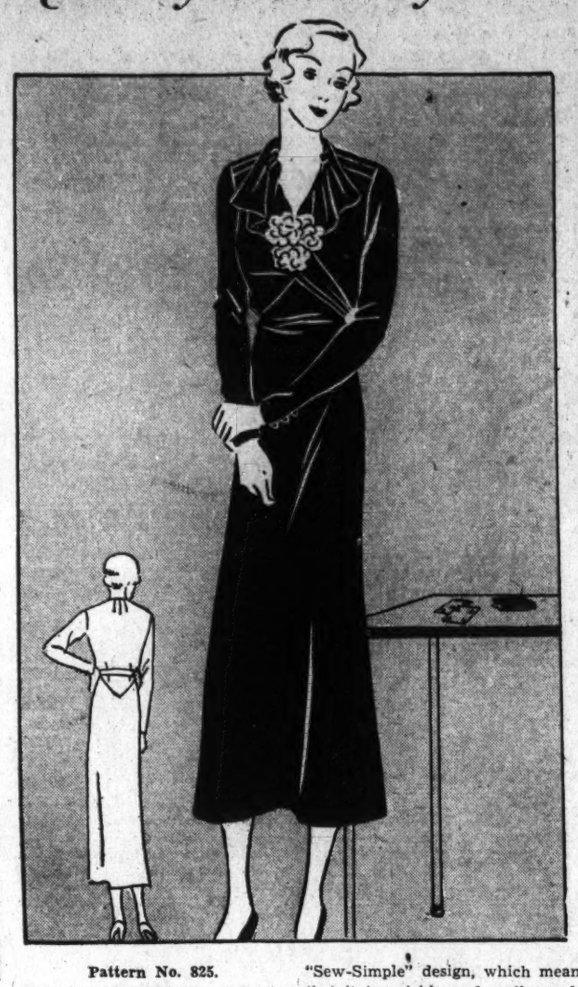
Frock For Bridge Parties Quickly and Easily Made



Pattern No. 825.

THIS IS the time of year when women are looking forward to many pleasant afternoons of winter bridge. And no matter how interesting the game, it does get tiresome if one has to play in the same frock time after time. Here is an inexpensive way out of that dilemma. This charming gown is a "Sew-Simple" design, which means that it is quickly and easily made. The jabot is in one with the fronts, so it is necessary to select a reversible material. It is stunning, for example, in a satin-back crepe.

Cut in sizes 1 to 20; 32 to 44. Complete yardage requirements are given on the pattern envelope.

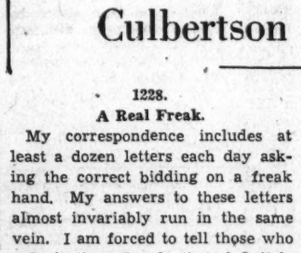
A Real Freak.

My correspondence includes at least a dozen letters each day asking the correct bidding on a freak hand. My answers to these letters almost invariably run in the same vein. I am forced to tell those who submit these hands that definitely correct bidding can not be given on freaks. I know that when a freak hand is dealt out in a duplicate game it is usually bid differently at the different tables—even when all the players are far above average and use the same system. Freaks offer players a chance to show individual initiative and brilliance, and to bid their unusual holdings in such a way that an abnormal result is obtained.

Frankly I must admit that I do get a little bit tired of seeing seven-six and similar freak distributions in my mail each morning. However, I do not remember having printed one of these in a long time, and on the theory that a little of everything is needed, I am showing one of them below which was submitted to me by Miss Gladys Canada, of Lynchburg, Va.

West, Dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.



The bidding: (Figures after bids refer to numbered explanatory paragraphs.)

West	North	East	South
1◇	2◇ (1)	3♣	3♠
4♣ (2)	6♡	Pass	Pass
7♣ (3)	Dbl. (4)	Pass	Pass (5)
Pass

Pass

1—Undoubtedly the correct bid with North's holding. North has an absolutely certain game in his own hand and a very probable slam. He shows the tremendous strength and distribution of his hand by the overcall in the opponents' bid suit—which of course is a force to game.

2—West knows from his partner's free bid in clubs at the level of three that a small slam is absolutely certain in clubs and a grand slam almost sure. It is barely possible from West's viewpoint that his partner has some such holding as six clubs to the King-Queen-Jack and a side Ace or King. However, it is far more probable that there will be no club losers and that accordingly seven-odd will be cold. However, West realizes from North's strong bid and from his own freak distribution that the opponents can probably make some sort of slam in either spades or hearts, and even if they do have a losing trick or tricks they will certainly have a very fine save at seven of either major suit, for the penalty will be far less than the value of a grand slam would be to East and West. West therefore decides to bid only four clubs to lull the opponents into a state of false security and conceal from North the tremendous distributional strength of his holding. West naturally is certain that the bidding will not stop at four clubs.

3—West is forced to bid seven clubs a little sooner than he expected to as the opponents got to their small slam without wasting much time about it. West bids seven now, feeling almost certain that North will get the impression that he is making this bid as a sacrifice and not with any hope of fulfilling the contract.

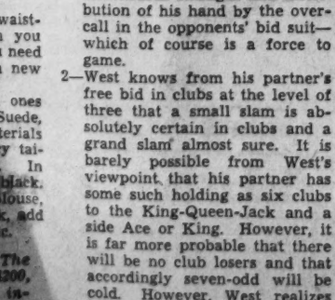
4—North does just what West expected him to do—and frankly I do not think North can be severely criticized—except from one angle. North, I believe, might have bid seven hearts, merely on the theory that seven clubs could not be penalized heavily in any case, and that since there was a bare chance, even with North's own strong holding, that seven clubs might be a laydown, the risk of letting the opponents play for the huge grand slam bonus was too big a one to take. However, North was hoggish and decided he wanted a small profit instead of a small loss.

5—South, in my opinion, should have gone to seven hearts because of his void in clubs, which North did not know about. However, South had decided to let his partner, who had the strong hand, take charge of the bidding, and accordingly passed.

It is obvious, of course, that seven clubs is a laydown and East-West scored over 3,000 points on the hand instead of 200, which is all they would have made had North and South gone to seven hearts. Seven hearts, of course, would be down one trick due to the bad division of the spade suit.

Tomorrow's Hand.

South, Dealer.
Neither side vulnerable.



This hand will be discussed in tomorrow's article.

LUXURY

By MARYSE RUTLEDGE

When lovely Jocelyn Crane accepts the fashionable Mrs. Oliver Keene's invitation to be a guest on a luxury-trip to Paris, she involves herself in a network of intrigue. "Ollie" Keene is flirting with a blonde gold-digger, Carrie Franks, and Rita Keene is interested in Prince Glazanoff. Jocelyn, as a screen, is necessary to both of them. Jocelyn has reluctantly left her husband, Dick Crane, at his wish, to face a summer that may make or break him in the advertising business. She is tortured by her last glimpse of him before she sails, with Mary Derby who insists on lending Jocelyn a pearl necklace. The night of the farewell party on the Ile de France, letters Rita has placed in Jocelyn's care, vanish. Jocelyn discovers Carrie Franks has them. Carrie tells Jocelyn she is holding the letters as whip over Rita.

AT that moment Carrie turned, saw her and came straight over with a directness that startled Jocelyn. "How are you this morning?" And she settled herself in the adjoining chair as if sure of her welcome. With an inner shiver of distaste, Jocelyn forced herself to answer pleasantly. Here was her chance to learn what she could.

"I envy you your complexion," Mrs. Franks went on, studying Jocelyn's flawless skin, with no hint of claws. "Of course, I find powder and rouge are my best friends——" She laughed, showing remarkably white teeth between the hard crimson bow of her mouth. "You'd be surprised!"

"I wonder if you could surprise me, Mrs. Franks," Jocelyn said softly.

Carrie Franks, in the act of taking out a large enameled cigarette case, paused, and there was in her arrested pose a curious sense of lightning calculation. She snapped open the case, lined on one side with monogrammed cigarettes, on the other with a closed card case effect. "Try one," she offered. "Ollie had them specially made up for me."

Confession Made.

Jocelyn took one rather deliberately, her high-bred profile inclined a little to one side so that she seemed to be gazing out at the brilliant blue of the sea. "He's very thoughtful, isn't he?" she murmured, feeling her way.

Carrie Franks leaned forward with unexpected venom. "He's much too good for Rita Keene." She stopped. Shrugged her shoulders. "I hate that woman. I hate any woman who marries a checkbook and makes the checks out—to some one else," she finished defiantly.

At Jocelyn's indignant protest she put out her hand. "Don't try to defend her. I know what I'm talking about." With a shrewd glance at Jocelyn's troubled face she added: "And I know what's bothering you, too."

"You went into my stateroom last night?" Jocelyn's voice was quiet.

Carrie Franks lit another cigarette, moving half out of the steamer chair to sit with her elbows propped on her knees. Blowing rings. "It was a rotten trick to play on you, wasn't it?"

"Rotten?" Jocelyn sounded her scorn. "It was despicable—criminal. You've got to give back what you took."

Mrs. Franks flecked an ash onto the deck. The sun showed her up mercilessly, a plumpish little woman who wore her make-up like a slightly tarnished shield. "I guess you'll never understand," she said. you've never had to fight to get what you wanted." There was bitterness on her lips.

"Why did you take the letters? Is it blackmail?" Jocelyn asked in low, stinging tones.

"Blackmail!" Carrie Franks' laugh was harsh. "I suppose it looks that way." With fierce strength she gripped Jocelyn's arm, her bangles slipping over her wrists. "I have nothing against you," she said. "And it isn't money I want out of Rita Keene. Just the use of her husband for this trip." Her hand fell away. "I've taken a lot from women, but I'm not taking any of it from Mrs. Keene. Not now, while I have those letters. If she leaves me alone I'll leave her alone. And you can tell her so for me." She rose from the chair and walked away with a backflung——"See you later——" leaving Jocelyn to carry her challenge to Rita.

For the past half hour, Mary Derby had been trying to cheer up Dick Crane. Now they were sitting in a corner of the Marsdens' little garden where she had led them after dinner, and still she had not succeeded in bringing a spontaneous smile to his bitter lips, nor any light of interest to his somber gray eyes.

Jocelyn Crane had been on the sea for two days, no doubt enjoying every moment of that luxury trip on which her friends, the Keenes, had so handsomely invited her. But it wasn't that, it couldn't be that which had drained all the youth from Dick's face. No, something else was terribly wrong. Something which weighed him down. How tired he had looked when she dropped into his office that afternoon to find him sitting dully behind his desk.

It had been—"Hello, Dickie." Trim in her blue tailored suit, Mary smiled at him.

"Oh, hello, Mary. This is nice of you!"

"I've come to drag you by force if necessary, out to Lawrence Park overnight. The Marsdens are sailing next week for one of those see-Europe-in-a-week-end tours. They want you for dinner before they go." Mary's alert blue eyes had taken in a lot of things while she talked rather fast, gayly overriding Dick's protest.

Wanted to Save Her.

"As one to another in the advertising business, I remind you that it's Saturday, Mr. Crane. And the month of May," she finished.

"I guess I won't go. Not today, Mary," and Dick had smiled back a trifle crookedly.

No—he couldn't go back to Lawrence Park. Their house was there—his and Jocelyn's—his beloved Lynn whom he had sent away because—oh, well. It seemed only fair to her. Why should she have to face the critical weeks ahead, the battle against possible defeat he was waging? At least for the next few months she would be beyond worry, having a wonderful time in Paris with the Keenes, who could give her all he couldn't.

Mary Derby, who knew men's hearts dangerously well, guessed some of this. She guessed that, with the Crane house rented to her friends, the Reisers, he would feel sensitive about going back even to the Marsdens. But if he took the plunge just once, it wouldn't be so bad. It might even be—very pleasant.

All had turned out as Mary anticipated. The dinner had been very jolly. Not even Lena Marsden's eternal gossip and her pushing questions had spoiled it, for Bill Marsden was a grand boy who produced good cigars and good stories with equal ease.

Mary Was Different.

Later while Lena fiddled with the radio, restlessly turning from station to station, Mary had drifted to the side door that opened onto the miniature garden. It wasn't the crisp boyish Mary of business hours; not the Mrs. Derby who, as advertising manager for Webb & Hoppin, talked and thought of nothing but furniture—furnishing other people's houses, putting over new designs, creating demand when there wasn't any. This Saturday evening Mary wore pastel blue chiffon with a bit of lace at her throat, which was lovely enough without any pearls. This Mary stood slopingly against the open door, breathing in lilac and narcissus.

Gradually, as she had hoped he would, Dick had strolled nearer, as if he, too, wanted to get out in the spring night air. But now he sat without looking at her, and her bright talk died down. Music floated from the open windows—an orchestra many miles away was playing a tango. It was music that painted pictures far more glamorous than this wedged-in, orderly spot which suddenly seemed a little smug with its limited bulbs and bushes.

To Mary Derby the tango plucked at nerves, stirred shadowy desires of which she was afraid. She wanted love—oh, how very much she wanted love! Restlessly she smoked and moved, her blue eyes returning to Dick. At last she went over to him and laid her hand on his shoulder. But in that light touch the witchery of the tango passed away. And they were—just Dick and Mary, old friends.

Business Worries.

"Why don't you tell me what's bothering you?" Mary came out, abruptly.

"I'm worried—damn worried," he muttered.

Yes, Mary had already guessed that.

"What about that Elliman account?" She knew of that, too.

Dick swung about. "It isn't generally known yet," and his voice was flat, "but they're headed for bankruptcy. Gad, it's rotten luck!" Somberly he stared over Mary's smooth head. "I've been working on that account for months—"

"Oh—my dear—don't I know—!" Mary's hand reached out impulsively.

'I didn't tell Lynn," he went on miserably. "It would have spoiled her trip. Without that account, I don't see—" He hated men who whined, but for over a week now he had carried alone the stark image of failure.

"I've a few big things dangling for the fall if I can hold out. But the shoe string's wearing thin, and with certain obligations I'll have to meet next month, I guess it's the end for me before Lynn gets back. A fine welcome home that will make—" The bitterness had returned to his voice.

There was a silence, then—"Oh well, something's bound to turn up," he said without conviction, thinking of the sluggish summer months ahead.

No Right to Tell.

"I think I know of something now." Mary hadn't meant to say it. She had no right to say it. It was a betrayal of a certain situation in Webb & Hoppin.

She had caught Dick's attention. "You're not thinking of your firm, are you?" When she didn't answer, he went on as if to himself—"Gryce has that account."

But Mary was thinking precisely of that—the Webb & Hoppin account which was important enough to set any man on his feet. And they hadn't been satisfied with Gryce's work lately. Her clear eyes tried to tell Dick this office secret.

"His contract's up on the 15th," she said. She shouldn't have gone on. Afterward she wondered what had possessed her.

"You mean to say they're not renewing?" Tense with hope, Dick pinned her down.

In her desire to stiffen his morale, Mary had implied something not strictly true. But—so nearly true. What Mr. Rossiter Finch, the vice president of Webb & Hoppin, had said to her only a few days ago, was—"Gryce has been letting down lately, Mrs. Derby. We can't afford any slip now, with our new campaign coming on——"

New Opportunity.

"This could mean a lot to me—if only I were sure—" Dick's shoulders and probing gray eyes seemed suspended over her, waiting for a word, a lead.

"You know our furniture has always been in the luxury class," she evaded. "We're starting another line now, Dick. We want to reach people who have to furnish their homes on a smaller income. That's what our future advertising will have to get over—"

Dick whistled, his hands jammed into his pockets. "It's like Cartier going five and ten. Gee, I can see a dozen sales angles, if they'd only turn me loose. Gryce has a Park avenue mind—he'll never get it——"

Mary nodded. Oh, why had she raised his hope this way? Dick was a better man any day, but even with inner discord brewing, Gryce would be hard to dislodge when it came down to it. He was planning the new campaign already as if he were sure to be kept on, and he had almost sold Mr. Finch on a basic slogan—"It's cheaper to pay more."

"I'd like you to lunch with me and our vice president next week," she said slowly. "It won't do any harm to meet Mr. Finch and let him know what you've done."

A Kind Offer.

"That's certainly great of you, Mary." He had never looked at her this way before, as if in her lay possible salvation. "Of course, it's all right if you say so—I mean, if they're on the lookout for another agency. Good Lord——" His hands trembled as he lit a cigarette. "If this leaks out, every agency in town will be after it like vultures."

"There won't be any leak." She was very sure about that. "And listen, Dick——" She put her hand on his arm—"Finch is sure to talk shop. He can't think of anything but our future program. If you could have a few very good ideas ready——"

"Not so sure about that——" Dick hesitated. "It's against the rules to solicit, you know, while the other fellow still has the job."

"Nonsense!" Mary's tone was all the sharper for the uneasiness in her own conscience. Too late to retreat now. "What they want is a common-sense appeal, less of the art than the price side. We supply the quality if we can only get the run of people to realize that in the end it's cheaper to pay more." She stopped short, paralyzed by her shocking blunder. She had repeated the slogan, word for word. She had given away Gryce's line.

And Dick, with his quick-trained mind, swooped down on it. "Say—Mary—what's the matter with that as a selling idea? It certainly tells the story. "It's cheaper to pay more." Sounds good to me. I'll use it to build on, anyway——"

To Be Continued Tomorrow.

How to Keep Well

Alkalosis.

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

AS was pointed out in the article of yesterday it is necessary that the acid-alkali relation within the body be maintined in proper balance. Our temperature limits may serve as an illustration.

Most of us know that for good health the temperature of the body must be kept at what has been found to be an approximately normal level—namely: 98.6 degrees F. The body endeavors to hold this temperature within a very narrow range. If from any cause the temperature of the body rises there is an increase in the rate of oxygen consumption, the heart beats more rapidly, the rate of breathing increases and there is a marked loss of water. A temperature of six or seven degrees above normal can be resisted by body tissues for a short time only.

The reaction of the blood is slightly more alkaline than pure water. We can increase the alkali in the blood as much as .2 or .3 above normal by rapid breathing that is kept up for 10 or 15 minutes. On the other hand the alkali can be lowered through the production of lactic acid in the muscles following a short period of active exercise. An increase in either alkali or acid is followed by symptoms that, if long continued, are incompatible with the normal functioning of the body and sometimes with the continuance of life.

In contrast with acidosis, alkalosis is a condition of the blood and other body fluids in which, as we say, the pendulum has swung to the alkaline side. In such a situation alkalis may have accumulated in the body through the administration of too much sodium bicarbonate, given as medicine or contained in food. Occasionally sodium citrate, a popular laxative, may be only partially oxidized, leaving the alkaline portion within the body. Sometimes through vomiting there is a rapid loss of hydrochloric acid from the stomach, thus depriving the body of a needed neutralizing substance.

Physicians may observe symptoms of alkalosis in those who have been taking the alkaline treatment for gastric or duodenal ulcer. Inasmuch as the treatment requires the administration of large quantities of alkali, these patients are usually carefully watched for the first appearance of overdosing.

The symptoms of alkalosis are marked restlessness, excitability, tingling sensations in various parts of the body, cramps and numbness. The latter manifestations are usually noted first in the extremities and the face. At times there is marked tremor of the eyelids and in extreme cases there may be convulsions. An examination of the urine will disclose a strong alkaline reaction.

In the treatment of alkalosis, as in acidosis, sodium chloride (common salt) serves as a remedy of great value. In extreme cases this may be injected slowly in proper solution into the patient's veins. When the condition is due to the administration of alkaline salts, treatment as a rule is unnecessary other than stopping the use of alkalis.

Varied Menus For Two Offer Leftover Problem

Baked "Cottage Ham" Ideal for Small Family; Sweets Can Be Provided by Making Cup Cakes by Dividing White Cake Recipe in Half.

By Dorothea Duncan.

TWO CAN live as cheaply as one, according to romantic theory, but to plan menus with variety for two presents the same problems as planning them for one. Economy features so prominently in today's scheme of living that to buy food that will not be entirely utilized is a waste. The same foods are often used over and over by a family of two, because they can be purchased in small quantities. This is particularly true of meats. Steaks and chops are the most over emphasized meats on dinner menus for two, because roasts and other larger cuts supply meat enough for a week's dinners.

Desserts, too, suffer because pie, cake, puddings and custards are usually made in quantities sufficient for a large family. These desserts are better the day they are made, and if only a part is eaten the day they are prepared, present a problem in leftovers.

A little forethought and studying of these two important items in the menu will help to bring variety into meals and prevent buying something in a rash moment that suits neither your budget nor the size of your family. For example, a family of two would hardly consider buying a whole ham just to satisfy the desire for a baked ham dinner.

Instead buy a "cottage ham," which is a part of the shoulder and has been boned and smoked. It has the juicy quality and fine flavor of the hindquarter ham and can be prepared in the same manner. It is ideal for the small family because it weighs only 1½ to 2½ pounds.

Baked Ham Dinner for Two.

Grapefruit and grape cup
Baked "cottage ham"
Corn fritters Green beans
Hot biscuits Radishes
Wine gelatin
Individual white cakes
Beverage

Instead of making a whole cake recipe, take your favorite white cake recipe, divide it in half and make into cup cakes.

Corn fritters may be made from left-over corn.

Corn Fritters.

10 tablespoons sifted cake flour
¼ teaspoon baking powder
1 teaspoons salt
1 egg yolk, well beaten
1 cup corn, drained
Few grains of paprika
1 egg white, stiffly beaten

Sift flour once, measure, add baking powder and salt and sift again. Combine egg yolk, paprika and corn. Add flour a small amount at a time, beating after each addition until smooth. Fold in egg white, drop from tablespoon into deep fat (370 degrees F.) and fry 2 minutes, or until golden brown. Recipe makes 6 fritters.

Buy double lamb chops, two ribs, and have a pocket cut in each one for dressing. These may be stuffed with bread dressing and baked and are much more economical for a family of two than a leg of lamb.

Roast Lamb Dinner for Two.

Cream of asparagus soup
Baked stuffed lamb chops
Mint jelly Celery hearts
Mashed potatoes Fried eggplant
Individual butterscotch pie
Beverage

Make baked pastry shells as for tarts and fill with following recipe.

½ cup milk
1 egg
1-3 cup brown sugar
2-3 tablespoon butter
2-3 tablespoon cornstarch
2-3 tablespoon powdered sugar

In top of double boiler, heat half of milk with sugar until the sugar is free from lumps. Mix the corn starch, remaining milk and egg yolk and add to the hot mixture slowly. Cook in double boiler until thick, stirring constantly; then continue to cook for 10 minutes longer, stirring occasionally. Remove from fire and add butter. When cool pour into tart shells. Cover with meringue made from the stiffly-beaten egg whites and the powdered sugar. Brown in slow oven (300 degrees to 350 degrees F.).

Trend From Films Shown in Survey

Englewood Study Reveals Preference for Games.

WHILE WOMEN'S clubs and parents' organizations are striving to fumigate the movies so children may attend them without being corrupted, the children are passing up the movies for athletic games. This was discovered by the better films committee of Englewood, N. J., when a survey was made recently.

At least 20 of the 1,500 grade and junior high school pupils who answered the questionnaire said they had never seen a movie. Others showed a strong preference for athletic games to attending picture shows when asked their choice of something to do after school. The majority reported they attended the movies only on week-ends. All the pupils said they liked comic or adventure films better than crime or romantic pictures.

Children in grades from the fifth to the seventh usually discuss the movies with their parents, the survey showed. Above the seventh grade there were few discussions with parents indicated.

Vindication of Principles Pressed by Feminists For Years Is Hailed by California Political Leader

Mrs. Grady Had Leading Role in Mission Play

Ancestral Ranch Was Used as Setting for Novel "Ramona."

By Hope Ridings Miller.

"AMERICAN women today are seeing a vindication of the principles for which they have fought since the turn of the century," said this attractive woman—scion of one of California's oldest and most respected families—whom the New Deal has recently shuffled into Washington.

The wife of Dr. Henry F. Grady, one of the widely acclaimed scholars in California, Lucretia del Valle Grady has gained much favorable attention on her own account, first as portrayer of the leading feminine role in John Steven McGroarty's famous Mission Play at San Gabriel, and later as an outstanding political leader.

She came to Washington recently with her husband, who has been given a leave of absence from the University of California and has accepted the post as special tariff adviser to the Secretary of State.

Takes Home for Winter.

"Being in Washington at this time is a special privilege," she said yesterday in the drawing room of the spacious house she has taken for the winter on Forty-fourth street.

"Washington today is a veritable laboratory, attracting the attention of the world," she went on, her hazel eyes alight with enthusiasm. "And as the United States goes, the world will go. That thought is particularly pleasing to women, who have watched the woman's movement take root and develop in America."

Mrs. Grady has been closely identified with this movement both in her native State and the East, having campaigned for suffrage in California and in New York.

"While those in power in European countries are, in some cases, proving reactionary to the position of women in public life, our President is according women more political recognition than they have ever had before," she continued.

"Women today have the opportunity to prove they deserve a place in political life. Feminists have struggled for this chance as long as I can remember."

Fortunate Selections.

In this connection, she pointed out, women in leading political offices have been fortunately selected.

"Then, too, every woman in America should salute the President's wife. She has virtually liberated women and is setting an ample of self-expression for all women. She has inspired us to emerge from the background into which it is only too easy for us to fall."

Mrs. Grady is one of those women, however, who would never fall easily into any background. Beautiful, and possessing unusual charm and personal magnetism, she impresses one immediately with her tremendous vitality. Known the length and breadth of California as the daughter of Senator R. F. Valle—who went to Mexico as President Wilson's special representative—Lucretia del Valle Grady has been recognized from childhood as a representative of the loveliest type of Spanish beauty and Spanish talents.

Yet she is only half Spanish. Her mother's ancestors, of whom William White, signer of the Compact of the Pilgrims was one, came over on the Mayflower, settled for a time in New England and gradually drifted toward the West. In the meantime the Del Valles were making their home on Camulos ranch, which was granted to them by the King of Spain.

Ranch Setting For Ramona.

Camulos ranch is still one of California's noted landmarks, since it was the setting of Helen Hunt Jackson's widely read novel "Ramona." Originally consisting of 45,000 acres, the ranch was one of the few remaining old Spanish homesteads when Mrs. Jackson went to California to gather material for her book. After visiting Camulos and seeing its unique hacienda, she decided to portray it in her novel. Furthermore, her character of "San Moreno" is generally accepted as a depiction of Dona Ysab l del Valle, Mrs. Grady's grandmother who was mistress of Camulos at that time. Mrs. Grady's father, eldest son of Don Ygnacio and Senora del Valle has been readily identified as the "Felipe" in the novel.

The hospitality at Camulos ranch has been acclaimed throughout California. Mrs. Grady can remember that during her grandfather's life, it was not unusual to see as many as fifty persons seated at one time in the spacious dining room. She remembers, also, when it was a custom at Camulos, as at many another Spanish home in the past, to place a basket of silver money in the room of a passing guest so that he might replenish his purse to meet the expense of his journey.

Mrs. Grady's grandmother, stanchly grounded in Spanish tradition, had crosses placed upon the hillsides to the north and south of the ranch house, "that heretics might know when they go by, that they are on the estate of a good Catholic."

Blend of "Old and New."

Having such a background, it would seem surprising that Mrs. Grady eventually came to be one of the political leaders in California. But by her own admission, she is "a blend of the old and the new" and as much of a pioneer as her ancestors.

Educated at the University of Southern California, Columbia University, and the University of London, she began pioneering at an early age, when she chose political science as her major field of study at a time when most girls selected English, foreign languages, or domestic science. She continued pioneering when she accepted the leading feminine role in McGroarty's widely known mission play at a time when few girls of good family were seen behind the footlights. Appearing in the play daily during the spring and summer of 1913 and later in San Francisco and other cities, she attracted much favorable attention as an actress.

But having conquered that frontier she went on to search for others, and soon became engrossed in the woman's suffrage movement in California. When that fight was won, she became vice chairman of the California State Democratic committee and in the last few years has been actively engaged in the work of a number of political and educational organizations, serving on the executive board of 29 different groups.

Spent Lot of Time Abroad.

She has, also, spent much time abroad, as Dr. Grady has been sent to foreign countries on a number of missions for the United States.

"Now I'm resting temporarily," she laughed, "and watching developments in this vastly interesting Washington political laboratory."

Charming vivacity personified, Mrs. Grady could easily pass for a woman in her middle twenties. But she doesn't care who knows she has crossed the "40 line" and has a son of 15, two other boys and a girl.

"What I find most interesting here in Washington," she said, "is the rising level of women in political life. I think the psychological attitude of women has much to do with this. In the old days women went into politics with a circumscribed point of view. Now they have a more objective, more pragmatic, and more scientific attitude toward public affairs."

A blend of two nationalities and a descendant of two types of pioneers, Mrs. Lucretia del Valle Grady (above) has recently come to Washington with her husband, Dr. Henry F. Grady, who is special tariff adviser to the Secretary of State, Mr. Cordell Hull. Below, the house at Camulos ranch, near Santa Barbara, owned by Mrs. Grady's father and used as the setting of Helen Hunt Jackson's widely read novel, "Ramona."

Woman's Crop of Teeth, Totaling 200, Extracted

Two hundred teeth were extracted from the mouth of a young woman in Kansas City recently. The patient, until she visited the dentist, thought she had only the normal number of teeth. So did the dentist until he had roentgenograms made of her whole mouth.

When these pictures were developed they showed scores of tiny teeth, ranging in size from a pin head to a grain of rice, embedded in the patient's gums and in the roof of her mouth. One full-sized tooth growing in the roof of her mouth had caused intense pain which in turn had caused the young woman to visit the dentist and learn of her bumper crop of teeth.

Guild Sponsors Theater School

Scenery Design, Acting and Play Directing Courses Offered.

TO LESSEN the gap between those who sit in front of the footlights and those who perform back of them, a school of the theater has been established by the Washington Drama Guild. First classes are being organized this week.

The new school is the idea of Edith I. Allen, who designed the sets for the Roadside Theater's plays last summer. Miss Allen, who studied at the Yale School of Drama under George Pierce Baker, has long dreamed of establishing courses here that would offer theoretical as well as practical work in all of the theater arts. She believes with the addition of the new school, the Drama Guild will achieve the status of a complete Little Theater.

Convinced that many playgoers would get more enjoyment out of the theater if they could criticize intelligently the scenery, lighting, and costumes, as well as the mouthings of the hero and the twitterings of the leading lady, Miss Allen has planned courses to take care of those things.

In addition to courses in scenery design Miss Allen will give lectures on judging scenery, lighting and costumes.

Dennis E. Connell, director and coach of the Drama Guild since its founding, will give courses in acting and play directing. Grace Peters Johnson, former professional actress, will discuss and review current plays in New York.

Dorothy Croissant will teach costume designing and execution.

All the classes will be held at 712 Jackson Place. Mrs. William J. Peters, of Chevy Chase, is in charge of registrations.

What Today Means

"Scorpio."

IF NOVEMBER 14 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 8:45 to 10:45 a. m., from 1:45 to 3:45 p. m. and from 5:45 to 7:45 p. m. The danger periods are from 10:45 a. m. to 12:45 p. m., from 3:45 to 5:45 p. m. and from 7:45 to 9:45 p. m.

On this November 14 it is advisable to exercise care in your personal appearance, as favorable or unfavorable impressions may be created should you meet some strangers. Errors in judgment on this date can only be avoided by paying very close attention to the minutest details of any discussion involving business transactions, where you are expected to express an opinion or carry out instructions. Harsh or abusive language must not be indulged in, if trouble is to be escaped. Too much chitchat may lead to gossip, which if repeated might possibly cause a strain in friendship with someone very close to you, so be wise by being guarded in what is said in friendly criticism.

Host and hostesses are apt to be greatly inconvenienced should guests be discourteous enough to fail in punctuality, so if invited out it may prevent embarrassment if you allow yourself ample time in which to reach your destination. Married and engaged couples, as well as those anxious to plight their troth, should avoid doing anything that will cause their beloved one the slightest concern.

If a woman and November 14 is your birthday, some of your expectations may very shortly be realized in a very agreeable manner. Do not allow yourself to become discouraged over anything that is not seemingly turning out the way you wish it to, for it you direct your efforts in the right direction there is every possibility of success resulting. Being of an artistic nature you might succeed best in some business relating to painting, etching, sculpturing, designing or writing.

Faster-Acting Ether Produced

Use Is Limited to Few Hospitals in U. S. and Canada.

BY MAKING human guinea pigs of themselves two Canadian physicians recently tried out a new ether that is faster-acting and has none of the unpleasant effects of the widely used ethyl ether.

Since the physicians, Dr. S. Gelfan and Dr. I. R. Bell, of the University of Alberta, experimented successfully upon each other with the new anesthetic, it has been used to ease the pains of childbirth. The faster-acting ether has also been used to induce quick, pleasant oblivion for teeth extractions and other surgical operations, Science Service reports.

Thus far its use has been limited to a few selected hospitals throughout this country and Canada, including one in Philadelphia and one in Montreal.

Just two years ago the new ether was made to order at the request of a scientist who predicted its usefulness as an anesthetic even before it existed. After it had been made from the scientist's formula, the Canadian doctors put each other to sleep with it before daring to try it on their patients.

Now more than 500 patients of a Philadelphia hospital and 300 mothers in a Montreal maternity hospital have made records which testify to the value of the new ether. Some scientists remain skeptical, however.

This latest development in anesthetics is not yet on the market.

Wives' Careers Cut Divorces, Artist Asserts

Mrs. Jacobi Says Working Women Take Trying Crises Lightly.

NEW YORK, Nov. 13 (AP).—Instead of breaking up marriages, wives' careers frequently hold them together, Mrs. Rudolf Jacobi, German artist, asserted tonight.

Signing her portraits "Annot," she specializes in painting "the independent woman" both here and abroad. Besides managing a home for her husband and two children, Mrs. Jacobi conducts an art school and is convinced the dual tasks "mix beautifully."

Professional and business women, she said, "have something new and different in their faces that makes them more attractive. I can tell by a woman's face whether she earns her own living or is dependent. Independent women have a kind of freedom and dignity in their faces.

Crises Taken Lightly.

"All life's problems are solved when a woman is independent. Professional women don't take problems as seriously as those with no profession, and marriages are not endangered because the independent woman does not regard so seriously the trying crises which always arise in married life.

"As for children, they love the work their mother does and are very much interested in her professional life. It makes them eager to work themselves."

Opposed Nazi Restrictions.

Blonde, sturdy and deep-voiced Mrs. Jacobi is half-German and half-Norwegian. She came to New York from Germany because, she said, the Nazi regime imposed too many restrictions on students.

Portraits, in the modern manner, of Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, Jane Addams, Lillian D. Wald and professional and business women, from farmers to patent lawyers, line the walls of her studio.

"Coming from Europe," she said, "one has the feeling that here something is growing and developing. New York can become what Paris has been—the art center of the world."

The Real Adult Can Take It or Leave It, Woman Tells "Stranger."

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I liked your answer to "Stranger" last Friday, and the comment of "Anonymous" in Monday's column. Of course, I am one of those infuriatingly rational persons, who see no sense in it anyway. People shouldn't marry until they are old enough and experienced enough to know what they want in life, and how to go about getting it. By that token they will be able not only to control such situations as may arise, but, to a great extent, to prevent their arising at all.

* * * *

Nevertheless, they do arise, and through no avoidable fault of the persons concerned. It seems tragic that two fine and intelligent persons should not be able to join their lives and powers freely: they might be able to contribute so much more to life together than they could alone. But superior intelligence and sensitiveness confer duties as well as rights, and where these two conflict, surely the duties come first.

* * * *

After all, one of the finest and most important attributes of the human spirit is independence. This is not selfish, because it is really easier to understand and sympathize with another person when you do not need understanding and sympathy yourself—provided you have needed them at some time. One of my pet theories is that it takes an unhappy love affair of one kind or another to make most persons grow up.

* * * *

Nor does it mean that you must not love the highest when you see it. You must simply be able to take it or leave it. There is always Browning:

"A man's reach must exceed his grasp,
Or what's a heaven for?"

* * * *

The man who is master of himself is the one who can contribute most to life. "Anonymous" says if "Stranger" gives up his love and looks upon himself as a martyr, he can not be a whole-hearted and, therefore, good father. But I believe if he is strong enough to make the renunciation, he will also be strong enough not to consign himself to martyrdom.

HOUSEWIFE.

Constructive Commentary.

DEAR HOUSEWIFE: From first to last, your letter is a sane, sympathetic and constructive commentary. I sincerely hope it is not overlooked by "Stranger." I think you have drawn an accurate picture of the real adult as one who, freely loving the highest he sees, is still possessed of the strength to take it or leave it, as fairness to those entitled to first consideration dictates. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Washington Post.

Restricted College Attendance Urged

Everybody is not fit for college, Dr. Dixon Ryan Fox, new president of Union College, declared recently in an address.

"Obsessed with the idea that everybody must go to college, we have tended to make the college fit for everybody," he said. "The results have been fit for the mass, but have confused standards.

"We should not pay heavily out of taxes or endowments to educate second-rate and third-rate minds for leadership they can not assume. We should pay as heavily as possible to educate first-rate minds.

"Nature's bounty is not going to see us through indefinitely. The old frontier, always ready to absorb the misfits, has now disappeared. Let us train, work and produce, for tomorrow we do not die. This may seem an arid philosophy and a dreary faith. You may reason that the earth belongs to those human beings who inhabit it at this moment, that they should take it for their own delight.

"But the historian knows that the present is only a figment of the imagination, and that only the past and the future count."

Plump Necks Are Developed By Exercises

THE DROPPED shoulder lines seen on so many of the new evening frocks cause many women to sigh and pass them by. For the dropped neck line, while lovely in itself, too often reveals scrawny necks and hollows underneath the collar bones.

But the determined woman need not sigh in vain, for a plump and pretty neck. All she needs is a little patience, energy and perseverance, and she can develop one.

The first thing she must learn is that correct posture has just as much to do with beauty as softening creams, muscle oils, or even special neck exercises.

Correct Posture Vital.

So the cultivation of correct posture is the first step. Here are some of the things to consider. Try them and see what happens.

Stand erect. Then draw in the abdomen and upper diaphragm as far as you can. Raise the shoulders. Force them back and slowly down to normal position. Pull the chin in. You'll find the chest bone is automatically raised, and the hollows perceptibly lessened.

Hold that correct posture and walk around the room several times. You will feel as graceful as if you were walking on air. What you are doing is taking the weight off the legs and walking with the chest. Try to walk that way all the time.

Simple Exercises.

There are several simple neck exercises which are also necessary to fill out the hollows.

1. Several times during the day go through the pantomime of blowing out a candle. Do it about ten times at each sitting. Do it in front of a mirror and watch the effect. The expanding and contracting movement exercises the tiny neck muscles by stimulating the circulation.

2. Then standing in the correct posture, take a deep breath. Holding the breath alternately expands and relaxes the area at the base of the neck several times.

3. Pat on a nourishing cream or muscle oil and massage into the hollows. Leave it on while you do the following exercise: Relax the neck muscles, draw the head slowly as far back as you can. Repeat four or five times.

Women Supplanting Men At Drum Beating in India

Women are gradually taking over the most important part of village life in India, the beating of drums, reports an American missionary at Vellore. Drums have been used for centuries at weddings, funerals, festivals. They have been used by jugglers, snake charmers, diviners and town criers. They have been used to woo the favor of goddesses and to rout devils. But until recently it was only the men who were permitted to beat the drums. Now the women are taking over the drum sticks.

Forts Regained In Chaco Drive, Bolivia Reports

Advance Wipes Out Most Paraguayan Conquests, Ministry Claims.

Buenos Aires, Nov. 13 (AP).—A new Bolivian offensive in the Chaco Boreal today had recaptured approximately 1,600 square miles of territory in the northwest portion of the disputed area, reports reaching Buenos Aires said.

The Bolivian drive, launched despite the onset of the rainy season, virtually wiped out Paraguay's conquests hard-won in the course of Gen. Estigarribia's advance toward the Parapiti River and Bolivian oil fields in August.

New developments in the fighting, in which dispatches indicated 20,000 men on each side were engaged, will depend on whether the heavy rains now due come soon and whether the Bolivians abandon operations until after the rainy season.

A crowd of 20,000 persons jammed La Paz streets last night in celebration of the Bolivian victory which, the ministry of war announced, smashed the Paraguayan right wing in the northern Chaco, threatened the center and pushed the enemy back 25 miles.

The Bolivian ministry claimed the recapture of Fort 27th of November, "smashing the framework of fortifications constructed by Paraguay in preparation for control of the petroleum region and opening a new path for a terrific threat against the Paraguayan army."

Ascuncion admitted loss of the fort, but asserted the recent heavy fighting in the Irindague and Villazon sectors cost Bolivia 513 casualties against Paraguay's 200.

As a result of the Bolivian offensive, westerly Paraguayan lines, which at the height of the drive in August nearly reached the 53d meridian, are now straightened out roughly along the 62d meridian.

Capture of Fort 27th of November and the Irindague fortifications left Bolivia confronting major Paraguayan strongholds at Picuiba and one of the most important battles of the long war was expected to be fought there either within the next few days or immediately after the rainy season.

Losses Listed At Hospitals In Maryland

State Aided Institutions $200,000 in Excess of Charity Funds.

One County Reports $25,335 More Than Free Budget.

Baltimore, Nov. 13 (AP).—State-aided hospitals in Maryland were said today to have spent approximately $200,000 in excess of funds given them by the State to care for free patients during the fiscal year ended September 30.

Samuel S. Shannahan, chairman of the Board of State Aid and Charities, who announced the figure, said $332,500 had been given the twenty-seven hospitals by the State to care for free patients, but that the large number of patients actually cared for represented an additional cost to the institutions of $196,468.62.

Shannahan explained that the State grants a certain sum per day for each free patient treated at the hospitals, but sets a limit on the number of patients which may be treated at State expense. When hospitals treat cases in excess of the number set by the State, Shannahan said, they must bear the expenses involved.

Shannahan said this loss was a "tremendous" one to the already overburdened institutions. In the case of the Johns Hopkins Hospital, he said, free work amounting to $87,275 in excess of the fund granted by the State was done. Among the other Baltimore City hospitals which suffered losses were Maryland General, loss of 16,774; Mercy, loss of $12,769, and Provident, loss of $17,770.

Among the county hospitals, Washington County did $25,335 in free work above its State appropriation limit of $10,000. Easton Emergency lost $14,629; and Peninsula General, at Salisbury, lost $11,280; Calvert County failed to earn its appropriation by $296. St. Mary's by $2,278, and Memorial Hospital, at Cumberland, by $746. These were the only institutions which did not suffer losses.

The complete report of amounts earned by county State-aided hospitals was announced by Shannahan today as follows:

County hospitals.	Amount earned	State paid

Charlottesville Asks Byrd Aid In Road Project

Fears Skyline Drive May Be Built on West Side of Blue Ridge.

Charlottesville, Va., Nov. 13.—Fearful the opposition of Frederick W. Scott, Richmond capitalist and rector of the board of visitors of the University of Virginia, to have the Shenandoah-Great Smoky Parkway pass through his mountain estate, Royal Orchards, above Afton, will cause the road to be built on the western side of the Blue Ridge, the Charlottesville-Albemarle Chamber of Commerce has asked the intervention of Senator Harry F. Byrd.

"The chamber directors," said the announcement, "have authorized a petition to the Department of Interior asking the Skyline drive south of Jarman's Gap be constructed along the peaks of the Blue Ridge instead of on the west side of the mountain, as now planned."

Federal engineers have run a preliminary line south from Jarman's Gap, where the Skyline drive will end, past Swannanoa and on to Blowing Rock, N. C. This line passes through Royal Orchards and Mr. Scott has sought to have the proposed parkway, sometimes known as the scenic highway, pass around his place. This would force the road to the western slope and would deny motorists a view of the Rockfish Valley from Swannanoa, according to the local chamber.

Although the Federal Government is ready to ask for bids on the first 10 miles or more of the parkway, the State highway department so far has been able to secure only 4.4 miles of the 8.6 miles between Jarman's Gap and Rockfish Gap, where the Charlottesville-Staunton highway crosses the Blue Ridge.

Maryland Notes Gain In Fight on Insanity

Monthly Clinics in Washington County and Special Opportunity Class for Borderline Cases Hoped to Reduce Number of Afflicted.

Hagerstown, Md., Nov. 13 (Spl.).—Maryland's campaign to reduce insanity is expected to begin paying dividends soon.

The tremendous cost of maintaining its mentally defective population annually was revealed by Dr. W. Ross Cameron, health officer for Washington County, in an address before the civic section of the Women's Club. Washington County is among the first where scientific efforts to reduce insanity have been launched.

The county has 183 mentally deficient persons in State institutions, the health officer said, each of whom is costing $250 annually—half paid by the State and the other half by the county. The total cost to maintain them is $45,750 a year.

Last year, 39 new patients were admitted to State institutions from the county. Now the State, in cooperation with the county health department, has started monthly mental hygiene clinics here.

The health officer does not believe mental deficiency can be eliminated, but said certain types may be prevented or cured.

Many of the mentally deficient cases, these clinics have revealed, are caused by physical defects, the correction of which the health department has found possible by a separate clinic held monthly. By correcting this type of disease, it was stated, the health department hopes to save many from becoming mentally deficient.

A special opportunity class for border line cases has been established in public schools, and it is felt most of the children can be saved from becoming public charges.

The health department is hopeful that at least one person can be saved from becoming mentally deficient at each of these clinics. If this average can be maintained, the State and county could be saved $1,750 upon each, as records kept by the State show that the average stay of these patients in a State institution is about seven years.

Bauman Takes Over Duties as City Treasurer

Succeeds C. R. Howard in Municipal Post at Fredericksburg.

Fredericksburg, Va., Nov. 13 (Spl.).—Kushener Bauman, former clerk to the city manager here, was appointed city treasurer today to succeed Clarence R. Howard, who died suddenly Saturday night after 21 years of service. Appointment was made by Corporation Court Judge Frederick C. Coleman. Mr. Bauman will hold the office until December 31, 1937, when Mr. Howard's unfinished term expires.

Mr. Bauman was indorsed by the city Democratic committee. He posted bond of $25,000 before Court Clerk J. W. Adams, and assumed his new duties today. The new treasurer served as clerk to City Manager L. J. Houston for 15 years. He also held offices of registrar of voters in the lower ward of the city and clerk of the school board.

He is a member and past commander of the Fredericksburg post of the American Legion, is past exalted ruler of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and has held offices in the Fredericksburg Rotary Club.

No successor has been named to fill Mr. Bauman's former position. Judge Coleman first offered the city treasurer's office to D. Gordon Gouldman, assistant cashier of the Farmers and Merchants Bank here, but named Mr. Bauman when Mr. Gouldman declined the appointment.

PWA Approves Sewer Award In Cumberland

Philadelphia Firm Gets Contract for Project's Second Section.

Cumberland, Md., Nov. 13 (Spl.).—Mayor George W. Legge yesterday announced that the Public Works Administration has approved the city council's award of the contract for the second section of Cumberland's intercepting sewer system to the Seaboard Construction Co., of Philadelphia, low bidder on the first section.

The PWA approval was necessary before the work could be started, as the city received a grant from the Government of a third of the total cost.

Work already has been started on the larger part of the project in the south end. A large number of men will be given employment within the next few weeks.

Mayor Legge intimated several weeks ago that all or part of the $150,000 bond issue authorized in 1920 for general improvements may be sold to aid in paying for the work. Bids on both contracts exceeded the estimates. The Legislature authorized a bond issue of $800,000, and there remains $150,000 unsold bonds, which the council may sell.

Installation of a concrete sewer conduit along Green street, advocated in recent years, is favored by members of the council, and it is believed the sale of the bonds will result in having the improvement made.

Richmond, Nov. 13 (AP).—Federal allotments for recreation areas in Virginia were listed here today at more than $11,000,000 during the past two years, with $5,195,131.76 of this going to State-owned parks.

The Federal Government has spent money on development of the Shenandoah National Park, the colonial national monument area around Williamsburg, Yorktown and Jamestown, the Wakefield National Monument, the Richmond, Fredericksburg and Petersburg battlefield areas, and the large national forest areas in the Piedmont and western parts of the State.

Several State parks will be opened to the public next spring. Areas are listed as 28,000 acres in State parks, 175,000 in national parks and 660,000 in national forests.

Wheelbarrow Ride Over Mile Course Pays Election Bet

Frederick, Md., Nov. 13 (Spl.).—Election bets, many of a unique nature, are being paid hereabout. About 125 men and women took part in a parade near Mottors Station, headed by Edgar Miller, a supporter of Gov. Ritchie, pushing LeRoy Hummerick, a backer of Harry W. Nice, more than a mile in a wheelbarrow. The parade was led by Miss Margaret Roberts, who impersonated Mrs. Nice, and an address was made by Basil Sanders, representing Gov.-elect Nice.

Headed by a hearse bearing the "Democratic corpse" in effigy, about 250 residents of Brunswick paraded the streets and passed the homes of prominent supporters of Gov. Ritchie. The hearse was drawn by two horses, and was preceded by a band which played mournful tunes.

Manassas Clubwomen To Meet at School

Invitations have been extended to the senior classes of all county high schools and to the public.

Fishing in the same spot where the late President Cleveland landed many a fine string of bass, Gov.-elect Harry W. Nice took week-end honors at the Woodmont Rod and Gun Club, near Hagerstown, Md., by hooking a 2½-pound smallmouth bass.

Incidentally, Nice will meet Gov. Ritchie and members of the State board of public works today at the request of the Governor-elect to discuss Maryland financial problems of the coming winter. After the discussion, Nice, weary from a strenuous campaign, expects to leave for Florida to pass several weeks.

Cattle brought to Eastern pastures from parched drought lands in the West by the Government are being herded for their last round-up. From all over the Virginia-Maryland area heifers and steers are leaving the fields that fattened them and are heading for the corrals of Baltimore and Chicago slaughter houses. The meat will be canned for Government relief distribution this winter.

Since Mrs. Alice Roosevelt Longworth offered her Washington home for sale, rumors have been circulating about Warrenton that she has been considering Fauquier County for her new home.

Until Saturday morning freshmen will keep a vigil on the St. John's College campus in Annapolis as precaution against a possible Johns Hopkins raid for wood to feed the huge bonfire that precedes the traditional football game between the two institutions.

Cumberland, Md., has struck on a pretty good idea. Property owners who are unemployed and owe the city taxes and water rents will be given an opportunity to work off their indebtedness as city employes on a sewer project. The novel plan was made effective in a new ordinance passed by the mayor and city council.

Lewis to Map Fight on Age Limitations

Ban on Workers Over 45 Not Fair, Says Maryland Representative.

Drive for Job Insurance and Social Equality Planned in House.

Hagerstown, Md., Nov. 13 (Spl.).—Means for extending the deadline of employability at 45 years, as fixed in insurance rates, will be given special consideration by members of Congress interested in social legislation at the new session of Congress, Representative David J. Lewis, reelected last week from the Sixth Maryland District, revealed today as he stopped off in Hagerstown en route to Washington.

Representative Lewis, who has been resting since the election at the home of his brother, D. W. Lewis, at Brisbin, Pa., also disclosed that the social legislation which he will introduce in the new Congress will be much broader in scope than measures introduced at the last session. He also indicated that the general objective for this social security program has the approval of President Roosevelt.

Research Planned.

Representative Lewis will spend the time between now and the convening of Congress in studying statistics and other information gathered on the subject by the Department of Labor, and will scan experience in other countries in old age pensions, unemployment insurance and annuity fields.

During 1931, Representative Lewis spent several months in Europe, where he made a preliminary study of the operations of social security. During that time he studied this question in England, Holland, Germany, Switzerland, the Australian colonies and New Zealand.

The new social security program planned for introduction in the new Congress will include unemployment insurance, around which the bill introduced at the last Congress was constructed, as well as old-age pensions and the annuity system.

Abolition Sought.

In discussing the employability at 45 question, Representative Lewis said that he planned to study the constitutionality of a national measure abolishing this discrimination, but that he had been assured a program that would prevent insurance companies from distinguishing between the age of workers in industry could be enacted by the States.

Because of this age discrimination, thousands of men over 45 years of age have been unable to obtain employment, he said. In order to obtain the lower rates offered by insurance companies, which operate on the theory that the younger the worker the less chance there is that he will have accidents, many industries refuse to employ workers over 45 where younger men are available.

With this discrimination against age policy disallowed by States, Representative Lewis feels that workers over 45 would have an equal chance with younger men to obtain employment.

Woman Awaiting Trial Arrested and Jailed

Cumberland, Md., Nov. 13 (Spl.).—Mrs. Gladys Sloan, 31, vaudeville entertainer, is in jail for the second time on the charge of operating an automobile while intoxicated.

Mrs. Sloan, whose home is in LaVale, was arrested on a similar charge at the time of the Cumberland Fair and was out on bail awaiting trial, when she was picked up again.

She had been in a local hospital for treatment for self-administered poisoning, officers say, and a guard has been placed at her cell in the county jail to prevent another suicide attempt.

Child's 2-Mile Run For Firemen Fails To Save Her Home

Baltimore, Nov. 13 (AP).—Six-year-old Nancy Schroeder ran almost 2 miles to turn in a fire alarm after her mother discovered a fire in the Schroeder home today.

Firemen stretched thousands of feet of hose through woodland and across gullies to reach the three-story frame dwelling located in the suburbs of Baltimore, but only embers remained when they arrived.

Peery Awaiting Hopkins' Word On State Relief

U. S. Administrator Hints Virginia May Lose Federal Aid.

Richmond, Va., Nov. 13 (AP).—Gov. George C. Peery still is awaiting information from Federal Relief Administrator Hopkins as to the future status of Federal aid to this State, he said today.

The Governor communicated with Mr. Hopkins after the latter had intimated that Virginia and a number of other States might be deprived of Federal relief funds unless they supplemented them with direct appropriations.

Virginia's claim has been that relief was afforded through the State highway department.

A committee representing the League of Virginia Municipalities, who conferred with Gov. Peery said that the State make a direct contribution to help meet their relief needs. The executive said he was keeping this request under consideration until he heard from the Federal administrator.

Berry Guilty, Is Sentenced To 14 Years

Carpenter's Helper Is Convicted by Jury at Harrisonburg.

Plea of Self-Defense Fails; Youth Unmoved by Verdict.

Harrisonburg, Va., Nov. 13 (Spl.).—Walter Berry, 21, carpenter's helper, was found guilty of second degree murder by a Rockingham Circuit Court jury late today and his punishment fixed at 14 years in the State penitentiary.

Berry admitted the shooting to death of Gleaves Calhoun, 27, a neighbor, after a party at a residence in the northeast section of Harrisonburg September 30, but contended he shot in self-defense.

He was indicted for first degree murder and Commonwealth's Attorney D. Wampler Earman asked the death penalty. The State held Berry shot without provocation and had planned the shooting for several hours.

Judge H. W. Bertram, in passing sentence, told the youth the jury had been "very lenient" with him, but expressed the hope the punishment would make a man out of him. The judge said it was unfortunate a young man should get involved in such an affair. He reminded Berry if he behaves himself he would be free in seven years. The jury deliberated an hour.

Berry appeared unmoved when the verdict was read and before sentence was pronounced he told the court he had nothing to say. He is the first white resident of Harrisonburg to be tried for murder in 12 years, and the courtroom was jammed to capacity during the two days of the trial.

Berry was seated in an automobile with a girl and shot Calhoun when he approached the machine and engaged in an argument.

Berry first denied the crime, but later admitted it and said he shot because he regarded Calhoun as dangerous when drinking.

Dickens' "Great Expectations" Furnishes Further Evidence of Cinema's Uplift

Involved Story Introduces New Character Star

Henry Hull's Film Debut; "Valley Forge" on Way; Amusement Notes.

By Nelson B. Bell.

While the works of Charles Dickens are by no means strangers to the cinema, it is seldom that any of his plots so abstruse as that of "Great Expectations," previewed yesterday morning by District school officials and the dramatic desks in the private projection room of the Fox Film Exchange, have found their way into the celluloids.

In several respects this Universal production of "Great Expectations," to be seen on the screen at RKO-Keith's beginning Friday, is a unique and admirable picture. That it presents more than one problem to test the "showmanship" of the exhibitor, for the moment, is no part of this discussion.

The most important consideration, until time for the complete and formal review of the film arrives, is that it affords Henry Hull the medium of his debut upon the talking screen.

A New Lon Chaney?

In Henry Hull, the actor who made so profound an impression in "Tobacco Road" in New York last season—a vehicle in which he was astonishing, but by no means unworthily, succeeded by that valiant former vaudevillist, Jim Barton—the screen has discovered a character artist who brings to the silver sheet a distinctive and a forceful personality, bulwarked by long stage experience and a deep knowledge of the intricacies of his profession.

There is talk that Mr. Hull is to be the "new Lon Chaney" of the gelatin drama. From the standpoint of capability and mastery of makeup, there is no visible reason why he should not be, if that is his wish.

It is he more than any other single member of the cast who makes of "Great Expectations" a picture that occasionally comes close to the borders of greatness.

Next to him, I should rank that amazingly effective youngster, George Breakston, who sprang to fame in "No Greater Glory," in the role of Pip. After these two come Jane Wyatt, Alan Hale, Florence Reed, Francis L. Sullivan, Rafaela Ottiano and numerous others with the frozen and strangely immobile Phillips Holmes, to these eyes, bringing up the rear.

Leaves Vivid Impression.

But individual performances are not so important in this heroic attempt to capture the spirit and the mood of Dickens as the fact that when the full footage of a lengthy film has run across the lenses, a definite and powerful impression of dramatic vigor, literary fidelity and conscientious effort remains.

"Great Expectations" is not the pleasantest of the Dickens stories, although it deserves to be ranked as one of his most colorfully melodramatic. There are elements of frustration in it that are difficult to capitalize in pictures designed for mass public consumption.

It is, nevertheless, another argument on the side of the cinema's very evident effort to encompass something of the world's best literature, music and interpretative talent, in the pursuit of its higher function, that any attempt at all has been made to translate Pip, Magwitch, Estella, Miss Havisham, Jaggers, Joe Margery and the rest into terms of a medium to which they are not, perhaps, ideally adapted.

Dr. Frank Ballou, Assistant Superintendent Stephen E. Kramer and Robert L. Haycock and other educators were among yesterday's enthusiastic spectators.

The experiment is a courageous one and in the eyes of all thinking people will deserve the success to which any such commendable effort is entitled.

So John Peter Toohey, the eminent scrivener whose talents are devoted to the celebration of Sam H. Harris' important undertakings in the theater, under date of November 12, has this to say immediately following a few cordial remarks concerning the work of Kenneth MacKenna, in "Merrily We Roll Along," the George S. Kaufman-Moss Hart hit now packing the Music Box Theater in New York:

"Bring on the Girls' is again in rehearsal. All the mad stuff is out. Instead of six R. F. C. men and two brain-trusters, there now are only two R. F. C. men, who are also former professors. The $400,000,000 comes down to $500,000 and even that amount is not obtained without a struggle. The farm is in, but without any of the fantastic features—no musical comedy uniforms. I'm not sure about the live stock—they're still writing the third act. All the 'extras' are out. No line of delivery men and no committee at the end. I really don't know how they are going to finish it. The whole mood is now the mood of the prologue and first act you saw. Boston and then Broadway. I'll send you some of the Boston notices."

This would be the George S. Kaufman-Morrie Ryskind comedy that played the National a fortnight or so ago, with Jack Benny in his first straight role. It will be interesting to watch how the piece fares in its new form. If they can maintain the pace of that first act, it will be a smash hit.

Newcomers to Capital.

The Blackfriars Guild's production of Jerome K. Jerome's "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," first enacted in this country by the distinguished English actor, Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, to be presented next Monday and Tuesday nights in St. Paul's auditorium, Fifteenth and V streets northwest, will introduce several new faces to followers of the Blackfriars' offerings.

E. Francis McDevitt, president of the guild, will be seen for the first time on a Blackfriars stage. Known heretofore as author and director, Mr. McDevitt will assume the stellar role of The Stranger, the role created by Forbes-Robertson.

Two new members of the guild are importantly cast in the Jerome drama. They are Catherine Shafer, who will appear as the caustic Miss Kite, and John Wilson, who will make his debut as a Blackfriar in the part of Jape Samuels.

Continuing a cofeatured acting partnership that has achieved more than moderate success in four pictures, Paramount again has cast Evelyn Venable and Kent Taylor in the romantic leads of "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," following "The Merry Widow" on the Palace screen this Friday. Miss Venable and Mr. Kent first appeared together with Dorothea Wieck in "Cradle Song" and scored sufficiently to have their joint services snapped up for "Death Takes a Holiday," "David Harum" and "Double Door." And now "Mrs. Wiggs."

M. P. T. O. A. Local Elects.

The Washington branch of the Motion Picture Theater Owners of America held its annual election of officers yesterday.

A. Julian Brylawski, one of the Capital's veteran showmen, was reelected president for the ninth consecutive term; Sidney B. Lust was similarly reelected vice president, and William B. Herbst, another of Washington's pioneers, was made treasurer for something like his fourteenth or fifteenth term. No one, including himself, seems to know precisely how long "Doc" Herbst has served. Nat B. Browne, of the local Warner Brothers' executive offices, was elected secretary, in which capacity he also serves the Variety Club of Washington, Tent No. 11.

The executive committee of the local organization for the ensuing year will consist of C. Cleveland, Charles Olive, Nate Stiefel, John J. Payette and Louis Bernheimer.

Sidney Lust was designated Washington's national director in the parent organization. A nice bunch of boys, in case you are interested. A nice bunch of boys, even in case you are not, as far as that goes.

Among yesterday afternoon's welcome callers at the dramatic desk were Alfred Head, accompanied by Penjandrum Stephen E. Cochran, of the National, and Ronnie Ames, bodyguarded by Dan Terrell of the Warner forces.

Mr. Head comes to Washington to contribute a little of his expert stimulation of public interest in the Theater Guild's production of Maxwell Anderson's new play, "Valley Forge," to be seen in the National Theater the week of November 26, which is by way of being Thanksgiving week, in case you haven't noticed. Mr. Ames, as usual, sounds off efficiently on behalf of Fred Waring and his Pennsylvanians, coming into the Earle to provide the stage entertainment on Friday. You have heard of these Waring's Pennsylvanians before, I dare say, since they have played no less than some 40-odds weeks, at one time or another, in this city, beginning back in the early '20s.

Of the subject of Mr. Head's euthusiasms you probably have heard less. "Valley Forge," then, will bring back to the local stage that admirable actor, Philip Merivale, who scored so decisively last season with Helen Hayes in the same author's "Mary of Scotland."

Ruth Weston will be the principal feminine member of the cast appearing in this Revolutionary play, based on the life of George Washington. Something to look forward to, this one.

Idle Hour Note.

Broadcast, WJSV, 10:45 a. m., (adv.) which is practically the middle of the night; George M. Cohan luncheon at Press Club, 12:30; daily column, Thursday midweeks, deadline for Sunday copy and art, banners, captions, toplines and what have you, if any.

A Prodigal Returns to Pictures

No longer than four years ago Iris Adrian was a graduate of the Hollywood High School, intent on getting a job in the "movies." As a step in that direction, she secured a place as chorus girl in prologues at Sid Grauman's Chinese Theater. A Broadway theater scout "caught her act," offered her a place in the "Follies" and finally engineered appearances in a famous night club and then in London and Paris. Now she is back on the Paramount lot, assigned to a part with George Raft and Carole Lombard in "Rhumba," their next picture.

Business Loss In Land Seizure Up at Hearings

U. S. Moves to Carry Out Wilson Promise on Arsenal Ground.

Bel Air, Md., Nov. 13 (AP).—The Government began hearings here today in an attempt to carry out a war-time promise made 17 years ago by President Wilson in seizure of 17,000 acres of land in Harford County for the Aberdeen Proving Grounds and the Edgewood arsenal.

The promise covered damages suffered in the seizure of the land. The present proceedings are not concerned directly with the actual value of the property seized, but with claims for loss of business attendant upon the seizure. Claims pending total approximately $1,000,000.

The actual land value was settled by a commission named by President Wilson shortly after condemnation.

The current effort to adjust values is the second of that nature. Several years ago, the Maryland delegation in Congress, basing its action on President Wilson's proclamation promising a "fair value" for loss of business, had the matter investigated by Government authorities. A test case was carried to the United States Supreme Court and the court ruled against payment.

The matter was considered closed until Senator Millard E. Tydings obtained passage of a bill reopening the cases.

Today's hearings were before a commission named by the United States Court of Claims and headed by W. W. Scott. Six cases were heard today and 25 more remain to be heard.

"Here, Rover, Here!"

Next morning when Mr. Man started out to the lot to feed Hee-Haw, he was whistling, for, while he and Mr. Man were dressing they were talking about their big dinner, and he was already enjoying it. But when he saw that wood that was piled on Billie's jail scattered all over the ground, and saw the door wide open, he didn't need to go any further to know that he and Rover would have to take to the woods that night if they were going to have a possum for Thanksgiving. He stopped his whistling, and called to Mrs. Man: "I wish you would just come here and see!"

Now here was another one of those mighty strange happenings. Where was Rover Dog when somebody was here tearing down the possum jail and letting him out? Where was Rover Dog right now?

"Here, Rover, here!" You may just know that Rover wasn't rearing to answer that call, for he was hardly dry from that ducking that Who-Who gave him, and he had been sneezing a good deal, for he had caught cold; and besides, he didn't know what Mr. Man was going to do about it.

But he came dragging out, and he was a pretty sorry sight. He didn't look as bad as he did that morning when the syrup had made almost a whole bed of straw stick to him; but he wasn't any picture of a pretty dog, for he was so wet when he went to bed that a lot of straw had stuck to him, and when it dried it was almost as fast to his hair as it was the other time. And his hair was awfully rumpled up, so it was easy for Mr. Man to tell that he had been in water.

Now Mr. Man knew how awfully Rover hated cold water, and he knew that Rover had either fallen in the water when he didn't intend to, or somebody had pushed or thrown him into it. And now here were those "strange animal" tracks! So that accounted for all these things! This awful animal, man or whatever it was, had come over here and knocked down the jail, and taken the possum for himself, because it was easier than catching one in the woods. And he must have done it all before Rover woke. Then when the dog did wake, he took after the "strange animal" and followed him to the creek. Then Rover either swam in after him and had a fight in which he got whipped, or the "strange animal" threw him in and then got away. Anyway, it was certain that Rover had been attending to his business, for if he had stayed in his house he wouldn't have been in this fix. So it was "Poor dog, they will keep on till they kill you yet. Go on in the kitchen and lie down behind the stove till you are good and dry and warm."

And to Mrs. Man he said: "Doctor Rover up and feed him good, for I have just got to take him out tonight and get another possum."

Family Is Held In Raid on Still

$1,500 Bond Set for Each of 3 Facing Court in Maryland.

Oakland, Md. Nov. 13 (Spl.).—Mr. and Mrs. Victor Kelley and their son, William Kelley, all of Hutton, a few miles east of here, are being held in $1,500 bond each for Federal court, following a hearing before United States Commissioner Taylor Morrison, Cumberland yesterday, on charges of manufacture and possession of untaxed liquor and possessing an untaxed still.

The Kelleys live well police said and have been engaged in raising poultry on a large scale. There were more than 1,000 fowl on the premises. Police say the Kelleys fed the mash to the turkeys and chickens and shipped the finished liquor in barrels to dry spots in West Virginia.

The officers, when they first appeared at the Kelley home, were denied admittance. They returned with reinforcements to find the mash had been dumped. A 60-gallon still was confiscated. The officers found a number of charred kegs.

Page Waller, of Alexandria, president of the Virginia Retail Merchants Association, to be present at a dinner meeting and address the association.

Burns Are Fatal To Ballston Man

Porter Hunt, 24, Succumbs in Emergency Hospital.

Porter Hunt, 24, of Ballston, Va., burned painfully Monday while working at the Washington Steel Form Co., Rosslyn, Va., died yesterday in Emergency Hospital.

Hunt's clothing was ignited while he was warming himself over a stove in one of the company's buildings. He ran into the open, and fanned by the rush of wind, flames soon enveloped his body.

Fellow workmen said they attempted to catch Hunt to roll him on the ground, but he eluded their efforts. He suffered third degree burns before the flames were extinguished.

He was brought to the hospital by members of the Jefferson Rescue Squad. He died without regaining consciousness.

Little Hope Held Out For Injured Oil Man

Richmond, Nov. 13 (AP).—Slight hope was held for the recovery of E. L. Van Buren, 46, Chicago oil executive, at Memorial Hospital here tonight. Van Buren was injured Sunday in an automobile accident on the Washington highway near here. Police said his car struck a parked automobile.

He is an official of the American Oil Co. and was en route from Richmond to Baltimore when the accident occurred. Mrs. Van Buren came here from Chicago.

Straight From the Studios

Hal Roach's "Babes in Toyland" Is a Previewed Hit; "College Rhythm" Also Wins Coast Acclaim; Newsy Hollywood Jottings.

By Edwin Schallert.

Hollywood, Nov. 13.—Walt Disney has a rival. Another maker of pictures has found the key that unlocks the door to the magic realm of fantasy.

The producer is Hal Roach, whose "Babes in Toyland," previewed last night, proved to be something new under the shining cinema sun, and also something that really will delight the heart of the child audience. And most of the grown-ups too.

STAN LAUREL.

This picture is so far ahead of any previous attempt to re-create the fairy tale idea on the screen with human characters that it is epochal. It is modern enough in feeling even to achieve its climax through the use of robots. How else could one regard the giant toy soldiers, whose coming to life is a thrill completly disconnected from the mechanical, and really a spectacular dramatic punch in a film that is replete with imagination?

Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy have never been more necessary or more real in any picture, even one of their best short comedies. They fit into the scene well-nigh perfectly. Charlotte Henry is the heroine, and Felix Knight the singing hero—and what a singer! Henry Kleinbach from the "Drunkard" company is the villain.

But the personalities are not what make the picture, albeit they are good; it is the dexterity with which the illusion of reality is created, and the wizardry that causes purely imaginary characters to assume shape, form and essential being.

Frank Butler and Nick Grinde are named as the adapters of the Victor Herbert operetta and Gus Meins and Charles Rogers directed. They have accomplished something rare and exceptional, which many others have said would be impossible to achieve on the screen—the vitalizing of the land of make-believe.

* * * *

"College Rhythm" Also in Preview.

Timely because it deals with the problems of the college football hero after graduation, "College Rhythm," previewed, should be rewarded with fair popular success, though it is far-fetched in theme and plot. Joe Penner and Lanny Ross are the surprise bits of the film, Penner succeeding in keeping the audience thoroughly amused whenever he is on the screen. Ross exhibits more understanding of action than heretofore.

The hero of the plot is really Jack Oakie, who does reliable service in this picture, and is responsible for an appropriate share of the laughs. Helen Mack, not at her best; Mary Brian and Lyda Roberti are the leaders of the feminine contingent, with Roberti the foil for Penner on occasion, and George Barbier assisting the duck expert the rest of the time. Barbier is, as usual, efficient.

Pro-football is used by two rival department stores as an exploitation stunt. The idea is sold to the owner of the store by Oakie. How it all works out is what the picture is concerned with, and it has been filmed at a good pace by Norman Taurog, as director.

Picture Pageant In Review.

On completing "Living on Velvet," with Kay Francis, Warren William is to start work on "The Blue Moon Murder Mystery," written by S. S. Van Dine, whose "Dragon Murder Mystery" was a decided hit on the screen.

Miss Francis has just recovered from a relapse, following the operation she had in the East. She was well enough to return to the set yesterday.

Una O'Connor, who was injured very badly because of a fall from a horse, is recovering. Several of her vertebrae were badly injured, and two ribs broken. Her performance as the maid with the gliding walk in "The Barrets of Wimpole Street" was an outstanding hit in a recent picture.

David Manners will play the title role in "The Mystery of Edwin Drood," with Claude Rains, Heather Angel and Douglass Montgomery.

Katherine Williams, baby Wampas star, and Kathlyn Williams of the old serial days are both appearing in "Rendezvous at Midnight." They look very much as if they might be mother and daughter.

Willy Castello, the Holland actor, who was outs with Universal for a while, is to stay on at the studio. A very favorable photographic test was made of the imported star and the studio is searching for a story to fit his personality.

"Sutter's Gold," for which it seems impossible to locate just the right actor, is now possibly to have Charles Bickford as its protagonist. Bickford is to take a test for the lead at Universal, where he has already been engaged for "I Murdered a Man."

"The Girl from Trieste," by Ferenc Molnar, has been purchased for production by M.-G.-M., and Harry Moses, who is to put on the play in New York, is out here looking for talent for the production.

There are to be all of eighty speaking parts in "Vanessa," and Donald Crisp, who appears with Helen Hayes in "What Every Woman Knows," is to do one of the most important of these. He has just been signed.

"Women Must Dress," the picture which is to introduce recent winners of the Afga-Ansco photographic contest, is to begin shooting very soon, with the leads played by Minna Gombell and Gavin Gordon, with Hardie Albright, Lenita Lane and Robert Light, borrowed from Warner Brothers, as other principals.

Mrs. Wallace Reid is supervising the picture, which Reginald Barker will direct.

Councilman's Election Work Unseats Him

H. A. Harrison, Hyattsville Official, Informed of 'Resignation.'

Howard A. Harrison, councilman from the First Ward in Hyattsville, is the first member of a town council in Prince Georges County to lose office as the result of election activities.

Attorney General W. Preston Lane, jr., has ruled that a councilman can not accept an election post without vacating his town post. Harrison served as an election official in the First Hyattsville Precinct in last week's polling.

Harrison has been representing the First Ward in Hyatsville, along with Councilman C. D. Anderson. He said he learned "something" of the ruling and asked Lane for a statement, but when he heard nothing from him went on and served in the election, as no trained substitute could be obtained at the last minute.

Corporation Counsel H. Winship Wheatley, jr., informed Harrison that he "resigned" his councilman post as soon as he accepted the election position, and that he had not been legally a member of the council since the primary election in September, in which he also served as an official.

Wheatley said Harrison could not be restored to the council by resigning his election post, according to Lane's ruling. Lane's opinion was sent some time ago to Frnak M. Hall, attorney to the Prince Georges County Board of Election Supervisors.

Harrison offered to "resign" when the council met Monday night, only to be informed that he already had vocated his position.

No business was transacted Monday as Wheatley ruled the meeting illegal as it was a legal holiday in Maryland in observance of Armistice Day. A meeting will be held tomorrow at 8 p. m.

Harris Signed, Griffith to Enter Open Market for New Hurlers

Three D. C. Boys in List of Nominations for Highest A. A. U. Award

Nats Owner Heads for Parleys

Large Part of $200,000 to Be Expended for Fresh Talent.

Joe Judge May Return to Resume Duties on 'Policy Board.'

CLARK GRIFFITH'S appointment of Bucky Harris as the 1935 manager of the Nats was only the first step in his efforts to set his baseball house in order, the owner of the Washington Club said yesterday.

With Harris as a consultant, Griffith declared he would go into the open market in search for playing talent. A generous portion of the $200,000 the Nats received from Boston in the Cronin deal will be expended for players, he said.

Late this week the Nats owner will depart for the general minor league meeting at Louisville in an attempt to obtain pitching talent. Other deals will be engineered by Griffith and Harris at the major league meeting in New York in December, with pitching strength their prime objective.

Will Miss Cronin.

Harris' first comment on assumption of the managerial reins of the Nats yesterday was a tribute to his predecessor, Joe Cronin. Asked his opinion of the Nats' prospects, Harris replied with a smile:

"Well, we'll miss Cronin."

The possibility that the Nats may acquire a second member of the famous board of strategy which directed the club to pennants in 1924 and 1925 was seen yesterday when Griffith admitted that Harris may engage Joe Judge as coach of the Nats.

Griffith revealed that Coach Al Schacht, Cronin's chief aid here, was considering an offer from the Red Sox to join Cronin's staff in Boston, and that Schacht had been offered a release by the Nats. Harris, though, may be of a mind to add Judge to the coaching staff in any event, Griffith indicated.

Directed Flag Teams.

Harris, Roger Peckinpaugh and Judge formed the triumvirate which laid down the Washington Club's playing policies in 1924 and 1925. Harris, the youngest manager in the league, was eager to accept the counsel of the two veterans who played on either side of him in the infield.

Harris declared yesterday that he believed Lyn Lary would handle acceptably the shortstop berth left vacant by Joe Cronin. As Lary's manager in Boston, Bucky admired his fielding from the outset. His hitting, he said, while not sensational, bore indications of improving.

Describing Ossie Bluege as the best utility infielder in baseball, Harris minimized his infield worries. Cronin's batting would be sadly missed, he admitted, but he looked for improvement in the hitting of both Lary and Cecil Travis.

Whitehill, Stewart Ageing.

The Nats' pitching worries are founded on the ageing status of two regulars on the staff—Earl Whitehill and Walter Stewart, who, next season, will reach the 35-year milepost. Added to their woes is the mysterious arm ailment contracted last season by Ed Linke, the most promising young pitcher on the staff, and Monte Weaver's seeming inability to pitch consistent ball.

Harris indicated his belief that the Nats are still well equipped to offer a serious bid for the 1935 pennant. "Last year, along about June, I still thought Washington was going to win the pennant. The club looked as if it had everything. Then those injuries started to pop. Nobody could help that, of course, but you can't underestimate the power that the team still has."

Salary of $11,000.

Neither Harris nor Griffith would divulge the salary which the new manager of the Nats will draw, but it is authoritatively reported that the figure is $11,000. This sum represents a compromise between the $10,000 offered by Griffith at the outset of the negotiations, and the $12,000 asked by Harris.

Thus Harris returns to Washington after six years absence with a terrific dent in his semimonthly pay envelope. After winning pennants for the team in 1924, Harris was given a three-year contract for $100,000, at the expiration of which, in 1929, he was released to the Tigers.

Minnesota Greatest In History—Kipke

CHICAGO, Nov. 13 (U.P.).—Nine of the ten Western Conference coaches agree Minnesota has one of the greatest football teams ever assembled.

The lone coach unwilling to call Minnesota "great" is the Gophers' own mentor, Bernie Bierman. He says:

"Minnesota has a good football team but it's too early yet to make any comparisons with the really great teams of history or of my own experience. Wait until the end of the season, then I may have something more to say."

Four conference coaches—Clark Shaughnessy, of Chicago; Harry Kipke, of Michigan; Noble Kizer, of Purdue, and Bo McMillian, of Indiana—regard Minnesota as the equal of any college team in history.

"I think Minnesota has the best team in the country and one of the greatest of all time," says Shaughnessy. "My scouts report the Gophers invincible. I'm afraid to think what will happen to Chicago when we meet them Saturday."

Called Greatest Team.

Kipke goes even further than Shaughnessy and calls Minnesota "the best football team I've ever seen together."

"I've seen some good teams in my time, including the Michigan team of 1925, and my teams of 1931, 1932 and 1933, but I've never seen a team with Minnesota's possibilities. They have weight and speed and play heads-up football all the time."

Noble Kizer, whose Purdue team probably will share the Big Ten title with Minnesota, says: "Although I haven't had the opportunity to see Minnesota in action, the Gophers must have one of the greatest teams of all time."

Bo McMillan calls Minnesota "the team without a weakness," and adds "Minnesota has more power, offensively and defensively, than any team I've ever seen. It's probably the finest team ever gathered."

Bob Zuppke, of Illinois, whose team also is unbeaten and untied, was extremely cautious in commenting on the Gophers, and stipulated that the following statement be carried intact, "Nothing added of left out." Zuppke speaks as follows: "Minnesota is certainly a team of great power with brains and deception as well and probably the greatest Minnesota team since Harry Williams' famous eleven." Zuppke would not say which Harry Williams' team.

Francis Schmidt, Ohio State, is keenly anxious to send the Buckeyes against Minnesota, saying: "I believe Minnesota has a great team, and probably will finish the season undefeated, but I wish we were going to play them, so we could get a crack at the title."

"Blocking" Is Praised.

"Dynamic power plus," is the way Dick Hanley, Northwestern, describes Minnesota. "The Gophers have one of the greatest blocking aggregations in the country. They wear a team down with their savage blocking and tackling in the first half, and then go out and run up four or five touchdowns in the second half.

Doc Spears, Wisconsin, who formerly coached at Minnesota, says: "I would say Minnesota has the country's outstanding team, with no team able to stand up under its attack."

Ossie Solem, Iowa, who saw Minnesota crush the Hawkeyes, 48-12, says: "Minnesota, with one of the best lines in the country, appears the likely winner of the Big Ten title, and possibly the national title. Lund, Biese and Kostka are three of the best backs I have seen in a long time."

Stoefen Turns Pro; Signed For Tour

Joins Lott, Tilden, Vines Troupe; Will Receive 12½ Per Cent.

NEW YORK, Nov. 13 (AP).—Lester Rollo Stoefen, the golden-haired leaning tower of tennis, of Los Angeles, relinquished his amateur standing today and signed a professional contract to play in Sports Promoter Bill O'Brien's barnstorming troupe over a Nation-wide circuit in 1935.

Stofen, a member of America's last Davis Cup team, national indoor titlist and coholder of the national indoor and outdoor doubles championships, accepted a contract calling for 12½ per cent of the gross gate receipts—the same percentage that his tandem partner, George Martin Lott, jr., of Chicago, signed for two weeks ago. Stoefen had held out for 20 per cent.

"I received Lester Stoefen's

Donday Doped At Arlington Track

Trainer Marone, Record Breaking Stable Are Barred From Meet.

ARLINGTON, Tex., Nov. 13 (AP).—The official veterinarian of the Arlington Downs race track reported today he had found that Donday, a horse trained by C. A. Marone, had been stimulated with an alkaloid.

The entries of Ted Clark, which had set track records at 1 mile and 1 mile and an eighth in winning the two big stakes of the current Arlington meeting, and of other horses being trained by Marone were ordered refused until placed in other hands.

There was no hint in the ruling that Ted Clark had been stimulated to his record-breaking feats. Ted Clark and his stablemates, Fair Cynthia and Flo M., were ruled ineligible for further competition "until placed in the hands of a licensed trainer approved by the stewards."

The stewards promulgated this order:

"Trained and Owner C. A. Marone has been suspended and his case referred to the Texas Racing Commission. The horses More Anon, Donday, Ruckus, My Etitia and Babson, the property of Marone and his wife, have also been suspended pending further action of the commission."

The report of the saliva test was made by Dr. J. J. Reid, of the Livestock Sanitary Commission of Texas, to the official veterinarian of the Texas Jockey Club.

The ruling set forth that all other saliva tests made at the meeting had been found negative.

Ted Clark, which in a few weeks has risen from the ranks of the lowly selling platers to handicap supremacy, is owned by Dr. Charles N. Mooney, of Toronto, Ont. Dr. Mooney is en route home.

Steve Hamas, Schmeling Matched

15-Round Bout to Be Held Early Next March in German City.

HAMBURG, Germany, Nov. 13 (U.P.).—Max Schmeling, former world heavyweight champion, and Steve Hamas, of the United States, current outstanding contenders, were matched today for a return 15-round bout to be staged "somewhere in Germany" early in March.

Walter Rothenburg, the Hamburg promoter who staged the recent Schmeling-Walter Neusel fight, announced that Hamas and his manager, Charlie Harvey, had accepted terms after more than two months of negotiations.

Accept by Cable.

He explained that, for a time, the negotiations seemed headed for failure because Harvey's guarantee demands were much too high for current conditions in Germany, "but like genuine sportsmen, Hamas and Harvey finally compromised on terms. I am not at liberty to divulge the terms which they accepted by cable today."

Because of Schmeling's impressive comeback victory over Neusel, German fans are confident that he will turn the tables on Hamas, who gave Schmeling one of the worst beatings of his career in Philadelphia last January. Hamas' recent victory over Art Lasky at New York makes the match doubly attractive.

Site Is Uncertain.

Site of the bout is uncertain because of the huge crowd expected, more than 25,000. Rothenburg said he would stage it in any large German city that would assist in erecting a large temporary hall. None of the existing halls in Germany will accommodate 25,000 fans. The largest is at Frankfurt am Maine, 15,000, and the next is the Berlin Sports Palace, which holds 12,000.

Rothenberg plans to advertise the match as one that will determine the challenger for Maxie Baer's heavyweight title. He rates Hamas the outstanding contender because of his victory over Schmeling and Lasky, and Schmeling next because of his triumph over Neusel.

Middleburg's Hunt Draws 35 Horses

Country's Best Jumpers Will Take Part in Saturday's Chase.

Knox College Is 2 Games Shy of Title, Says Hobart.

Geneva, N. Y., Nov. 13 (AP).—While Knox College gridders of Galesburg, Ill., were taking bows for the questionable distinction of losing 25 tilts in a stretch, Hobart College adherents were digging up records to prove that the Genevans are still the crown wearers.

The records show that Hobart lost 27 in a row, while the best Knox can offer is 2 shy of this mark. The Genevans started their sensational streak on November 24, 1928. From then until November 21, 1931, the Hobart gridders tasted nothing but defeat.

Record Crowd Is Seen For Navy-Pitt Contest

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Nov. 13 (Spl.).—A new record for attendance at football games in Annapolis will be set at the clash between Navy and Pittsburgh to be staged in Thompson Stadium at the Naval Academy on Saturday. With a sell-out already indicated by the heavy ticket demands, officials of the Navy Athletic Association today were arranging to place additional temporary stands that will swell the gross seating capacity beyond the 24,000 mark. The previous high mark was reached at the Navy-Maryland and Navy-Washington and Lee game, when more than 22,000 tickets were sold.

Refreshed by the lay-off yesterday, in view of last Saturday's hard paces with Notre Dame, the Middy regulars resumed activities with a vim today in preparation for the invasion of the Panthers. Offensive workouts dominated the program, as is generally the case on Tuesday, and it was an intensive session, as Lieut. Tom Hamilton, head coach, and his assistants have devised a number of new formations and fancy stuff to spring on the Pittsburghers.

Toughest Assignment.

That Pitt will prove the toughest assignment of the season thus far is realized by all hands in the Navy camp, and, regardless of the Army battle two weeks hence, the stars will be drilled to shoot the works against the enemy in the hope of preserving their unblemished record.

The Middies have combated various elements in subduing previous opponents, but in meeting Pitt they will be up against an organization that possesses skill and experience, combined with weight, power and speed. And, above all, the Panthers have an alert and airtight defense against passing.

Navy's offensive in this respect has been the main weapon throughout the season, but hope is held that deception in their diversified attack will prove sufficient to bewilder the Panthers and bring ultimate victory. The Panthers will have a weight advantage on the Tars, but they are not as ponderous as either Notre Dame or Washington and Lee.

Officials for the game will be: Referee, Very (Penn State); umpire, Crowley (Bowdoin); head linesman, Geiges (Temple); field judge, Palmer (Colby).

The Pitt-Navy series includes six games, since their first meeting in 1912.

District, 'Bama Star Elevens To Battle

Cain Will Lead Invaders in Charity Contest on Dec. 8.

AN all-District college eleven in action—something even the optimistic grid fan dared not dream of, will be a reality on December 8 when such a team, selected by Jim Pixlee, of George Washington, plays at Grifith Stadium.

The All-stars will meet "Hurry" Cain, Alabama's greatest pig-skin toter, who'll lead a team of 'Bama all-stars into action, all for charity. Net proceeds will be turned over to Almas Temple's charity fund.

Hank Crisp, line coach and director of athletics at the University of Alabama, already has called out the 'Bama stras for initial preparations and reports a strong eleven in the making.

More Power, Rhythm.

Crisp contends it will have more power and rhythm than the team which met Georgetown, Catholic U. and George Washington in an oexhibition in 1931.

A strong team is what Crisp will need to combat Washington's finest. With Tuffy Leemans, Red Rathjen, Harry Deming, Ab Wright and a flock of G. W. players; Tom Oliver, the Gearty brothers, Gene Augus-

Track Stars Dominate Choices

Leverton, Widmyer and Peacock Entered for Sullivan Medal.

Eastman and Bonthron Among 27 Suggested in National Poll.

NEW YORK, Nov. 13 (AP).—Record-breaking track stars, led by Blazin', Ben Eastman and Tiger Bill Bonthron, dominate the list of nominations made so far in the contest for the James E. Sullivan Memorial Medal, awarded annually by the National Amateur Athletic Union to the country's outstanding amateur performer.

Twenty-seven athletes have had their names suggested so far in the preliminary poll conducted by the A. A. U. to determine the leading candidates, upon whom a Nation-wide vote will be taken. The list includes three women, Virginia Van Wie, three-time national golf champion, and Katherine Rawls and Lenore Kight, swimming stars.

Track and Field Leads.

By sports the candidates are distributed as follows: Track and field, 13; golf, 4; swimming, 4; all-around college athletes, 3; football, 2; tennis, 1.

Although the college gridiron season is at its height, Capt. Francis (Pug) Lund, Minnesota's all-America half back, is the only football star of the current campaign to be nominated. Another on the list is George Henry Sauer, Nebraska's all-America full back, who finished his college football career in 1933.

Golf is well represented, with W. Lawson Little, holder of both British and American amateur championships, apparently certain to be among the "finalists" in the voting, but the only tennis player on the list so far is Bryan (Bitsy) Grant, Atlantan, who has a reputation as a "giant killer."

Second Last Year.

Among the numerous track and field stars, it appears Bonthron may run another close race for the award. Last year the Princeton University miler finished only a single vote behind Glenn Cunningham, of Kansas. The final tally was 611 to 610. This year Eastman, as the result of a sensational comeback, has caught the popular eye and appears to have an edge over all rivals, based on the preliminary reports. Eastman and Bonthron not only have compiled marvelous competitive records but they come highly recommended for their sportsmanship and influence on athletics.

The list of nominations, according to Daniel J. Ferris, secretary-treasurer of the A. A. U., probably will be cut down to five or six for the final and decisive ballot by the Sullivan tribunal. Formerly, a list of ten has been submitted. This will be decided at the annual A. A. U. convention in Miami, December 7-9, and the final vote taken by January 1.

Arranged alphabetically, the nominations on file follow: John Anderson, of New York, Olympic discus champion; William R. Bonthron, of New York, track record-holder; Glenn Cunningham, of Kansas, mile record-holder; Clarence Demar, of Melrose, Mass., marathon veteran; Benjamin B. Eastman, of San Francisco, holder of five middle distance track records; Bryan Grant, jr., of Atlanta, tennis; Glenn Hardin, of Louisiana State, hurdling record-holder; Harry Hinkel, of New York, champion walker; Charles Hornbostel, of Indiana, Big Ten track champion; Lenore Kight, of Pittsburgh, national women's swimming

Six Longshots Win at Pimlico With Sylvan Song, at $84.40, Paying Largest Mutuel

Our Trouble, $56, Takes Eighth

Kawagoe, One of Two Winning Favorites, Wins Feature.

By Walter Haight.

PIMLICO RACE TRACK, Nov. 13.—Seldom in the history of racing in this section has the mutuel board been called upon for a display of figures of the proportions shown here this afternoon. Six outsiders, five paying in double numbers, turned back their favored rivals. Beginning with the day's steeplechase, in which Teakwood paid $40.20, the parade included: Taunton, $17.90; Sylvan Song, $84.40; Rough Diamond, $12.30; Diseur, $9, and Our Trouble, $56.90. It was the longshot players' dream day. However, the gleeful shrieks of the successful could harly be heard above in the groans of the favorite players.

Those who install the so-called public choices picked up a few scraps when Potion won the fifth race at a $3.50 mutuel and Kawagoe took the sixth at $5.30.

Second for Kawagoe.

Kawagoe's victory came in the day's feature race, a 6-furlong dash for the better class sprinters, and added another winning purse to the successful George D. Widener Stable's account. Kawagoe led the small but smart field to the wire in the god time of 1:12 and marked the second win of the meeting for the Widener horse.

Mrs. Deering Howe's Only One lasted to take the place money from E. R. Bradley's Bold Lover by a head margin. Kawagoe breezed to the wire a length ahead of this pair.

Off to Good Start.

Johnny Gilbert had the mount on Kawagoe and rode well. After a good start, Kawagoe went to the front, followed by Trumpery. The Widener horse soon shook off this rival and drew way from Only One when he took up the chase in the stretch. Bold Lover came from far back to get into the place-money battle. Ajjaccio, well-played, was fourth, while Burning Blaze, returning to the races after a two-year layoff, was outrun all the way.

The steeplechase proved disastrous for form followers. Teakwood, at $40.20 for $2, jogged home first by five lengths. Action was second, two lengths in advance of Spinach. Redshank, the favorite, lacked his customary speed. Teakwood gradually overhauled the leaders and, taking the lead after the final turn, drew off and won unextended.

Favorite Players Boo.

The finish of the second was so close that many favorite players booed because their choice, Major General, was placed second to the $17.90 shot, Taunton. However, the decision looked to be correct. Salisbury, the early pacemaker, was a good third.

Silvio Coucci, who recently won a race astride Galyarrow at "telephone number" odds, again gave his admirers a golden opportunity when he drove the Greentree filly Sylvan Song to victory in the third race. The combination paid $84.40 for two. Bit o' Shade lost the purse by a head while saving second money by a half length from Marching Home. The latter set the pace but faltered in the closing strides as Sylvan Song and Bit o' Shade settled the issue.

Rough Diamond Scores.

The fourth race, called the Pimlico Home Bred, brought no relief to the talent. This 6-furlong juvenile dash, with starters to be owned by the breeder and to have been his absolute property since time of foaling, went to C. V. Whitney's Rough Diamond, which led almost from the start to record his second success in a row. The Mad Hatter gelding, paying $12.30, beat the slow startnig Legume by three parts of a length. Peradventure, the choice, lost the place by a similar margin.

Potion, odds-on favorite under Coucci, gave the Bronx Express a riding double and form players their initial triumph of the day in the fifth contest. Although last in the field of six platers in the first quarter-mile, Potion ran over the field when in his stride and won by two lengths from Sun Abbot, which received a poorly-judged ride. Occidental was third. Potion returned $3.50.

Shenandoah Seeks New Grid Streak

Plays Potomac State at Keyser Saturday.

Dayton, Va., Nov. 13 (Spl.).—Shenandoah will attempt to start another winning streak Saturday at the expense of Potomac State, in Keyser, W. Va.

When St. John's defeated the Hornets last week it was the first time the team was beaten this year, the second time a touchdown was scored on them and the second time any team had crossed their 30-yard line. The Shenandoah-Potomac games are annual fixtures on the schedules of both teams and bring together two strong junior college teams.

KAWAGOE, hard urged to maintain a slight lead during the opening furlong, increased his lead when straightened into the home stretch, then was steadied until the finish to hold ONLY ONE safe. Latter, a strong factor and close up from the beginning, held on resolutely in the final drive. BOLD LOVER eased back out of tight quarters when leaving the back stretch, finished determinedly when finding racing room only to outside. AJACCIO circled his field to finish with a rush. TRUMPERY had splendid speed for the first five furlongs. BURNING BLAZE showed a good effort for his first start in over two years. He pulled up sound.

DISEUR slipped through on the inside of the pacemaker when midway of the back stretch, sprinted into a long lead entering the homestretch and then held away until the finish. TRIOLET, in usual slow to get into racing stride, went to the outside in the last half-mile, lost considerable ground, but was best of the others. RETRIBUTION closed gamely in the last half-mile. BUNTINO came with a belated rush after dropping back at the final curve. REIGH ROSE went nicely for the first seven furlongs. DONA DULCIN stopped, as did HAIR TRIGGER.

OUR TROUBLE, kept forwardly placed in the early stages, came willingly after dropping back at the final turn, and in a same finish was up in the concluding strides. PENCADER, reserved off the early pace, moved up strongly when reaching the homestretch, and then fought it out stoutly when reaching the leaders. OUTBOUND had nice speed while setting the pace, shook off strong efforts from ROCK COVENTRY and tired inside the final furlong. AIRWAY could not improve his position in the final drive. COAT TAILS was held safe. DUNFERN sulked and raced in dull fashion. OLD MASTER was never a factor.

Pimlico Race Track, Nov. 13.

Dear Al:

Tomorrow is getaway day at this hilltop track. It has long been the theory that the stables turn loose surprise winners on the final day of each meeting. And it looks as if the popping began today. Certainly did make my headache every time I looked at the mutuel board. Thursday the scene of battle shifts to Bowie. Don Meade is the highest paid jockey in America. In addition to getting a percentage of the stakes he wins, Meade gets a salary of $1,000 a month from E. R.

Danny Burton Boasts Ringer Golf Score of 22-24-46 at Army and Navy Club

Seven Eagles Included On Card

Only Man to Drive 11th; Cold Weather Checks Rock Creek Play.

IF a professional golfer could go out one day and record a round like his all-time ringer score, his performance would be nothing short of miraculous.

Danny Burton, the 21-year-old red-haired pro at Army and Navy Country Club, has compiled a ringer score that is something to rave about for a 6,062-yard course. Burton has scored a 22-24—46, 26 strokes under par.

Seven eagles are included on his score. The remaining 11 holes are birdies.

A few days ago Burton came within eight inches of holing out for an ace on the par 304-yard eleventh, a par 4. He was satisfied with his eagle. He is the only golfer who has ever driven this green, and it was done during a drizzle. Since November 1, 1932, when he came to Army and Navy, Burton has eagled the second hole, a 480-yarder, par 5, no less than seven times. He has scored two eagles on the sixth.

His ringer score:

Out—
Par	4	5	4	5	4	4	3	4	3—36
Burton	2	3	2	3	3	2	2	3	2—22
In—
Par	3	4	4	5	4	5	4	3	4—36—72
Burton	2	2	3	3	3	3	3	2	3—24—46

The frigid weather yesterday forced postponement of many scheduled matches in the Rock Creek turkey golf tournament. Only F. W. Chase and George Marlowe were bold enough to brave the icy blasts for their fourth flight match, and Chase triumphed, 4 and 3. In the title flight Volney Burnett and Ben Kong are due to play their second round match at 1 p. m. today.

Washington Golf and Country Club will meet the Hermitage Country Club, of Richmond, Sunday in the "rubber" match of their series. The Washington golfers triumphed, 10-8, last Sunday, Richmond without the services of Billy Howell, and Washington minus its stars, Jimmy Drain and Frank Roesch.

The new eighteenth and seventeenth holes at Army and Navy have been virtually completed, and these, with at least seven others, are expected to be ready for play next spring. Plans are to remodel the entire 18 and build an additional 9, giving the course 27 holes. The eighteenth, a 225-yard, is par 3 hole, and the seventeenth is a 325-yarder, the latter a dogleg.

Some hot firing is expected along the Congressional golfing front Friday in the District Champions of Champions tournament. Champions and runners-up from each club in the District are eligible. Luther C. Steward, jr., of the host club, is defending champion, and is strongly favored. Howard Nordlinger, eight-time Woodmont titleholder, and Miller B. Stevinson, six-time Columbia champion, also will compete. Martin F. McCarthy, who reached the third round in the National Amateur at Brookline, also is eligible, since he was runner-up to Stevinson at Columbia.

Carelessness on the part of golfers is causing greenskeepers at the clubs no end of worry these days. Huge hunks of divots are being taken out dialy without being replaced, and greenskeepers point out that this negligence often costs a club several thousand dollars. Teeing up during the winter is ordered for the express purpose of saving the course.

Stoefen Now Pro, Signed for Tour

signed contract in the mail today," O'Brien said. "Now our plans for the 1935 tour are all set."

Stoefen and Lott will be teamed with William (Big Bill) Tilden and Ellsworth Vines, a pair of former champions and international stalwarts. They will open in New York on January 9, with singles exhibitions involving Lott vs. Tilden and Vines vs. Stoefen. Lott and Stoefen will oppose the other pair in doubles.

Ranked third in America's "first ten," Stoefen first broke into prominence a little more than two years ago when he defeated Frankie Parker in four sets for the Ohio State championship.

Some tennis disciples saw in him a second Tilden, for in build, grace and some of their strokes the 23-year-old 6-foot-4 Californian and Tilden are alike. Stoefen has a powerful service and takes full advantage of his height, playing a smashing overhead game.

He opened the 1934 campaign by winning the Bermuda championship and then added the national indoor singles and doubles championship to his string. While in England last summer for the Davis Cup interzone and challenge rounds, Lott and Stoefen won the all-England doubles title and then scored the American team's lone point against the cup-holding British.

Race Horses Crash In California Fog

San Mateo, Calif., Nov. 13 (AP).—A heavy fog here today caused a head-on collision of two race horses on the Bay Meadow turf, breaking both their necks and seriously injuring a jockey, James McLaren.

The horses were Sir Richard, owned by Mrs. A. Horton, and Mint Memory, owned by John Manale, New Orleans. McLaren was riding Sir Richard in a morning work-out when Mint Memory tossed his rider and ran wild the wrong way into the oncoming Sir Richard. McLaren's skull was fractured.

Defense?

Terrors, Scored on Twice, Get New Orders.

WESTMINSTER, Md., Nov. 13 (AP).—Coach Dick Harlow of the Western Maryland Terrors thinks it's time his team learned a little about defensive football.

The Terrors blanked Villanova, Albright, Boston College, St. Thomas and Catholic University in succession, but last Saturday let Westchester Teachers College score two touchdowns. So, Harlow issued orders that this week's work will be "back to fundamentals" in tackling and forward pass defense.

Western Maryland's season score sheet shows that the Terrors have scored 146 points against the 12 scored on them.

The Terrors meet Bucknell at Lewisburg, Pa., Saturday.

13 Palace Aces Started With Team in '26

Began as 125 Pounders, Now Near Crown in Unlimited Class.

THIRTEEN football players, who started out eight years ago as members of the then 125-pound Palace A. C., are still with the club and will attempt to lift Palace to the first half championship in the National City Unlimited Football League in the benefit game with Brentwood Hawks Friday night at Griffith Stadium.

These gridders, none of whom is more than 24, have never played high school or college football, but as sandlot players go are regarded as among the best in Washington.

They started out in 1926 by winning the District 125-pound championship, repeated the following season, and were graduated to the 135-pound ranks in 1928 with equal success.

Keep Title in 1929.

They retained their 135-pound laurels in 1929, and in 1930 the team ran into a mild slump, dropping its only two local games in eight years, at the hands of the Centennials and Columbians, and being knocked from the 135-pound throne.

Stepping into faster company, the 150-pound class, in 1931 Palace, its team intact, won the title, and repeated the next two seasons.

This season the team which Jack Perron organized as 125-pounders and nursed along for six years, before he gave way to Mike Scanlon, former St. John's star, has pulled itself up by its bootstraps, so to speak, and is on the verge of achieving its most notable victory. Palace, only one point from the college-studded team of the Maryland A. C., needs a victory over the Hawks to clinch the title, and the dope is that it will win going away.

Original Members.

The 13 original members of the team organized in 1926 follow:

Linemen—Eddie King, Bigsley Shriver and Razor Vernon, tackle; Edgar Heflin, center; Percy Vernon and Doll McDermott, guards; Alvin Gheen, end.

Backs—Billy Reagon, quarter; Eddie Healey, Harry Divers and Johnny Scanlon, half backs; Jimmy Dearborn, full back.

Reagon, a wisp of a player, weighs only 116 pounds, but defies all the laws of football by dumping 200-pounders, and eluding the strongest and heaviest of his league opponents. Then there is Razor Vernon, a 125-pound tackle, who, like the all-American, Bert Metzger, of Notre Dame, relies on speed and shiftiness, rather than strength, to down the opposition.

Mrs. Whitney Wins $1,000 'Stakes

Rides Bon Diable to Win Over Large Field in New York Show.

NEW YORK, Nov. 13 (AP).—Mrs. John Hay Whitney, of New York and Upperville, Va., today rode her famous Bon Diable to victory in the $1,000 Sweepstakes as competition in the National Horse Show reached the stage where the leading equine performers made their bids for championships and purses.

Mrs. Whitney's triumph was a signal victory for the South and West stables, which are holding their own against the numerically stronger Northern establishments.

With conformation as well as performance over the fences counting in the final decision, Bon Diable, a big gray gelding, defeated a large field. Second place was won by Alvin Untermyer's veteran campaigner, Ulic, often referred to as the "perfect" lady's hunter.

Three-Gaited Victor.

From Charles T. Fisher's Dixiana Farm, of Lexington, Ky., came Miss America to be crowned the champion three-gaited horse under 15.2 hands, first of the many title events to be decided before the show closes its seven-day run tonight. Competing against eight other brilliant trot, walk horses, the bay mare from the Blue Grass never gave a better exhibition than under the guidance of Charles Dunn.

The reserve ribbon went to Etta Kett, from Frances M. Dodge's barns of Rochester, Mich.

Judy King, of Atlanta, Ga., continued her sweep through the harness classes, to go into a tie with Mrs. M. F. Yount's Spindle Top Stable, of Beaumont, Tex. When La La Success paraded to the top in the Seaton Pippin Challenge Cup competition it marked the tenth time that horses from the Southern sportswoman's stable had been victorious.

Has Yet to Be Beaten.

No effort was made to beat Mrs. John R. Thompson's King of the Plains, from Lake Forest, Ill., in the class for hackney pony stallions under 14.2 The King, yet to meet defeat in a show ring, scored a walk-over for his second victory of the Garden exhibition and remained the odds-on choice to retain his crown as king of the harness ponies.

Old-Timer Explains Sprint Wiles of 90's

By Paul Gallico.

NEW YORK, Nov. 13 (Spl.).—There was a gab-meeting in one of the offices of Madison Square Garden the other morning that began as a boxing talk and wound up, curiously, with track meets. Present were James J. Johnston, the boxing promoter; Col. John Kilpatrick, who used to be Johnny Kilpatrick, Yale end and track star; a colored prize fighter named John Henry Lewis, his father, a hale old fellow of 65 with white wool atop his head, and this listener.

The old gentleman is named John E. Lewis. His ancestors were snatched from the African interior and brought hither in the holds of the slave ships. Lewis' great-grandfather was freed in Pennsylvania in 1803, and they have been freedmen ever since. From the time he was 11 years old and ran away from his home in Akron, Ohio, and went down to Mississippi, old John E. has been examining sporting life in America.

He was a fighter, a jockey, a professional footrunner, a cavalryman and a trainer of athletes. He has four sons. One of them is preparing to go to the University of California to study medicine when he finishes his premedical course in Arizona. His present occupation is looking after his son, John Henry, who is a light heavyweight of some ability. John Henry wants to make money so that he can go to school. Four generations removed from the aborigines.

How we got on the subject of footrunners. I do not remember, but old John E. Lewis knew them all, all the old-time pro sprint men. He rattled them off, names I had never heard, but which must be familiar to all old-timers—Piper Donovan, and his brother Pooch, Steve Farrell, English Jack Gibson and American Jack Gibson, Walter Christie, Harry Bethune, who also ran under the name of Crawford; Jim Weekly, Coocoo Collins and Skater Brahem. It was back in 1894 and before that some of these worked the sweetest boob-bilking, hayseed-trimming racket that ever was. Foot running at that time enjoyed tremendous popularity in the rural districts and professional sprinting was in its heyday.

Ran Their Own Man.

One of the gang of pro runners would go out, six weeks in advance, to some rural center that boasted a pretty fleet fellow and take a job—usually in a livery stable. It would be noised about that he was pretty smart off the scratch himself. A race would be arranged and he would beat the local star by at least 10 or 15 yards and in close to record time. A month or so later the pro troupe would swing through the country advertising that they had a sprinter who would give any local man 10 yards and beat him.

The happy peasants, the light of greed shining in their eyes, would immediately think of Joe Doakes down in Si Prentices' boarding stable. Give him 10 yards? Haw, haw, haw! We'll take that thar bet, stranger, and a couple hundred more. Hadn't Si's man stepped 100 in 10 seconds against their own man? Waal, now stranger, you say your man'll give ourn 10 yards and beat him? Come around tonight and we'll have some more dough.

The great match race would be arranged, and the natives would go down hook, line and sinker on Joe Doakes to win. Five, 10, 20 thousand dollars would be taken out of a community at a clip. The race would be run, Joe Doakes, a member of the gang, would lose and the troupe would move on.

Never Stopped Running.

Old Dad Lewis told one story of a time so much money was bet that Skater Braham, who was playing Joe Doakes at that time, never stopped running. Losing conveniently by 3 yards, he kept right on going, down the lane to where he had a horse and buggy parked, and departed rapidly from thence. They would have lynched him if he hadn't.

John Henry Lewis, the prize fighter, sat slumped down in a leather chair and read a newspaper while his dad did the talking. He is a big, coffee-colored chap, with no marks of his trade on him but some cuts on his face. Dad has only one scar on him, a burn on his left eyelid, where a Spanish Mauser bullet creased him when the Tenth Cavalry at Santiago went to the rescue of Teddy Roosevelt and the troubled New York 71st. There was an artillery unit that aided in that rescue, too, a battery of Hotchkiss guns known as the Jackass Battery. Jack Pershing was in command. The 71st was in trouble because they were still using the old Springfields and at every volley a cloud of smoke betrayed their position. Dad Lewis' outfit had just been issued Krag-Jorgensens, using smokeless powder.

Fought in England.

Dad said his great-great-uncle was an American slave from Culpeper Court House, in Virginia, named Tom Molyneaux and who was freed in 1803. He could fight. In England in 1810 he fought a champion named Tom Cribb, and had him out. His seconds created a disturbance, giving Cribb time to recuperate, and Cribb won. They used to bilk the innocent blackamoors in those day, to. Molyneaux was one of the most famous of the old time fighters. Another great-great-uncle, says Dad Lewis, was in Washington's surveying party through Pennsylvania, with Braddock. When Dad Lewis ran away from home he worked for the Long and the Chinn families in Kentucky, exercising horses. An outlaw horse cured him of that. For five years, Dad Lewis was trainer for the track team at the University of Southern California. That is strictly fact. So is the army record. Maybe some of the rest of it is imagination. But it makes for good gab, sitting up in the office off Broadway, listening to a sparkling old colored man talk of the great characters of American history with which his family somehow became connected.

3 Prep School Tilts Slated On Friday

St. Alban's Plays Landon, Devitt Meets Bullis in Features.

Prep School Standings.	W.	L.	T.		W.	L.	T.
St. Alban's	2	0	0	Gonzaga	1	1	1
G't'n Prep	1	1	0	St. John's	0	2	1
Bullis	1	1	0	Friends	0	2	0

WITH the interhigh series a thing of the past, interest of scholastic football followers is turning to the race for the mythical prep school championship of the city.

In this week's games, St. Alban's, undefeated and untied in local prep school competition, meets Landon; Georgetown Prep faces St. John's, and Devitt, undefeated and untied, meets Bullis. All three games will be played Friday.

The St. Alban's game will dedicate the new Landon athletic field at Bradley and Wilson lanes northwest. Landon was defeated, 6 to 0, last week by Boys' Latin, of Baltimore, which defeated the Saints by the same score earlier in the season. St. Alban's is favored to emerge wit ha clean slate Friday, however.

Devitt Also Favored.

Devitt, with Joe Mills, former Eastern ace half back, in its line-up, also is expected to keep its record unblemished although the Bullis outfit, coached by Morris Gouge, former Navy quarter back, has shown plenty of strength this year, including a victory over Gonzaga.

Reports are current that a prep school league may be organized next season with an interlocking schedule, assuring an elimination means for deciding a champion. St. Alban's, Gonzaga, St. John's, Georgetown Prep, Friends and Landon are named as the potential members of the league. Devitt and Bullis would be excluded since they permit high school graduates to participate on their teams.

St. Alban's Enters Claim.

St. Alban's, with an impressive victory over Georgetown Prep to its credit, as well as one over Friends, claims it is virtually prep school champion. Georgetown Prep is the sole team to defeat the strong Gonzaga aggregation, hence Devitt's two victories over oft-defeated St. John's and Friends are somewhat less impressive than the Saints' record.

Georgetown Prep and Bullis, each with a loss and a win apiece, hold the runner-up berth. Gonzaga, having a victory, loss and a tie, is a rung lower.

Radio Ban Sought by Grid Teams in Coast Conference

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 13 (AP).—Pacific Coast Conference football may go off the air next season.

Objection to the broadcasting of games is reported to be increasing and the question will be reopened at the annual meeting next month.

Opposition to the broadcasting already has been unofficially voiced by Stanford and California. Southern California is believed ready to line up on the side of the two big northern California universities.

Alfred R. Masters, graduate manager of Stanford, said he was convinced that broadcasting "is hurting and will continue to hurt our attendance."

"Something will have to be done on the matter," he added. "If not, the time may come when the colleges will be run out of the football business."

California's spokesman, Bill Monahan, expressed views in similar vein. He said he "knew Southern California was 'fed up' on the matter."

An oil company paid $60,000 this year and last for the right to put all Conference contests on the air. These sums were divided among the ten Conference schools, according to the number of games handled and their importance.

Faith Firm, Centre Players Are Still 'Praying Colonels'

BOSTON, Nov. 13 (U.P.).—They're still "The Praying Colonels" of Centre College, although they no longer make their supplications on the playing field as they did so dramatically when they played at Harvard Stadium in '20, '21 and '22.

In the dressing room before their Armistice Day game with Boston College, which the home team won, 7 to 0, Capt. Ray Converse and his mates from Danville, Ky., dropped to their knees.

"Dear Lord," Converse prayed, "please help us to play like gentlemen today. If it is your holy will, help us to victory. If we aren't to win, aid us in playing clean and hard, so that either in victory or defeat we can walk off the field having reflected glory to our college, our coach and ourselves. Thank you, dear Lord. Amen."

To a chorus of "Amens," the players arose and filed out to the field.

Football Fatalities Show 15 Pct. Decrease

FOOTBALL fatalities during the 1934 season decreased 15 per cent from the corresponding period last year. Seventeen gridiron deaths occurred throughout the Nation during the played portion of the current campaign, while 20 were recorded by November 13, 1933, according to the United Press.

These official figures were released tonight by Prof. Floyd R. Eastwood, instructor of education at New York University and statistician for the National Intercollegiate Athletic Association and for the American Football Coaches Association.

Technique Improved.

The 15 per cent decrease is particularly important, Prof. Eastwood emphasized, because it shows that improved technique and safety measures have continued to remove the danger element despite the fact that the game has been opened up and spurred on to a faster pace.

Ten of these 17 deaths occurred in high school football, three in sand lot, three in athletic club competition and only one in the college game. Eleven high school gridiron deaths were registered by November 13 last year.

The fact that the high school death toll continues comparatively large is due to lack of proper coaching in some sections, lack of proper condition among the players and lack of proper equipment, according to the statistician.

Only One This Season.

He pointed out that college football fatalities decreased from six on November 13, 1931, to only one this season. This, he said, showed that much of the danger could be eliminated when coaches concentrated on teaching players how to protect themselves on hazardous plays. Increased use of the safe tackle instead of the head-on tackle during the past three years was the most important factor in cutting down the death list in the college game, Prof. Eastwood said.

Only among the athletic clubs did fatalities increase this season. Last year on November 13, only two deaths had occurred among those teams. Three fatalities have been recorded this season. Sandlot deaths decreased from five to three, college deaths from two to one.

A total of 27 football deaths occurred during the entire 1933 season. At the present rate, Prof. Eastwood estimates that the 1934 total will not be more than 22. This would be considerably smaller than the 39 for 1931 and the 33 for 1932.

Head and neck injuries continue to cause most of the fatalities.

Babe Ruth, Earl Whitehill and Jimmy Foxx contributed homers to the usual rout of the pick of Japan's baseball players. The score:

Pixlee is expected to select the Washington team early next week, since it will not take long for the players to learn plays for the game. All, naturally, will be in topnotch condition.

Tickets for the game will be placed on sale tomorrow at Spalding Bros. and Almas Temple. If purchased before December 8 they will be $1, but on the day of the game the price will be $1.65.

8 Catholic U. Seniors to Play Last Local Game Against South Dakota on Saturday

Key Players In Farewell Contest

Coyotes Boast Tricky Team; Cardinals in Splendid Shape.

EIGHT Catholic University seniors will play their last game for the Red and Black before a local audience Saturday when the Flying Cardinals engage South Dakota at Griffith Stadium. All will have important roles.

Catholic U. has one game remaining, with Duquesne, but this will be played at Pittsburgh next week.

The departing gridmen are Capt. Bill Conter, tackle; Danny Pyne, guard; Tommy Oliver, full back; Babe and Tom Gearty, half backs; Gus Augusterfer and Ed Thibodeau, quarterbacks, and Red Fleming, end. All have played conspicuously for the Cards this season.

Pointing for Dequesne.

Head Coach Dutch Bergman expects his men to take South Dakota in stride, and while not overlooking the Coyotes entirely, is pointing for next week's game with Duquesne. Bergman is stressing offensive work in practice. The Redbirds uncorked a potent punch on Oglethorpe last week and the C. U. mentor is determined that it will be just as strong in these last games.

Catholic came out of the Oglethorpe game in fine shape, excepting a few minor bruises, and will have its full strength available for the Westerners.

South Dakota is bringing a brother act, twin brothers at that, along with it. They are Mel and Mar McNickle, half-pint half backs. Their combined weight doesn't make a good-sized full back, but speed, not brawn, is their forte.

Boast Tricky Team.

Scout notes on the invaders show that Coach Harry Gamage has taught the Coyotes all of the grid tricks at his command. The team operates with several trick formations, including a spread, with the McNickle boys the spearhead of the attack.

South Dakota is en route to Washington and is scheduled to arrive Friday in time for a workout. The game Saturday will begin at 2 o'clock.

D. C. Nominees Prominent Students

Leverton, Widmyer and Peacock Outstanding Campus Leaders.

ALTHOUGH best known through their athletic prowess, Roger Leverton, Roger Peacock and Earl Widmyer, Washington's three nominees for the Sullivan A. A. U. award, also have gained distinction as outstanding college students.

Leverton, a product of Central High School, went to University of Richmond four years ago with a reputation only as a swimmer and diver. He was the District A. A. U. diving champion. Never an athlete in high school, he has developed into one of the greatest athletes in the history of the Richmond institution, winning letters in football, basketball, baseball, track and boxing. A triple-threat in football, he was responsible for his team's victories over Cornell, Georgetown, Davis Elkins. An all-around athlete, he is outstanding in his studies, president of the senior class, a member of Omicron Delta Kappa, national honorary fraternity.

Peacock, reared in Silver Spring, within a mashie shot of the Indian Spring Country Club, has skyrocketed to fame in golf. At Duke University he was an outstanding student and campus leader, and captained two championship golf teams.

Qualified for Amateur.

Twice a qualifier for the national amateur championship, he has won the District championship, and for the last two seasons has won the Maryland State amateur title. His most notable achievement occurred a few months ago when he shot a 62, 9 strokes under par, at Indian Spring, to clip Bobby Jones' mark for a standard-length course by a stroke. Peacock also set two course records in North Carolina, and is the holder of course records at Beaver Dam and Manor. At present he is manager of Indian Spring's golf club.

Midmyer, University of Maryland senior, regarded as one of the fastest football players in the country, gained considerable national prominence in indoor and outdoor track meets. He has cracked records in Southern Conference track competition, being a sprinter. A ten-second man, he also plays in the Maryland back field and has been an outstanding player for three seasons. Widmyer is captain in the Reserve Corps and excels in his studies.

Hagerstown Wins Field Ball Game

Hagerstown, Md., Nov. 13 (Spl.).—The Hagerstown High field ball team, Washington County champions, eliminated the Frederick High, Frederick County champs, from the State elimination contest here today, 14 to 8. Hagerstown will play the Allegany County champions next week at Hancock.

Tennessee to Play 10-Game Schedule

Knoxville, Nov. 13 (AP).—The University of Tennessee will play a ten-game schedule in 1935 which includes two new rivals—Auburn and Southwestern, of Memphis.

The 1935 schedule is as follows:

Generals Scrimmage For William and Mary

Lexington, Va., Nov. 13 (AP).—Coach Tex Tilson's Generals, with a State title at stake, today held the first of several hard workouts in preparation for William and Mary's Indians at Williamsburg Saturday. The squad was sent through a long scrimmage this afternoon on Wilson field, using both offensive and defensive tactics against William and Mary plays as portrayed by the reserves.

Alexandria's Warrenton Game Off

Rivals Unable to Muster Team Due to Studies; Play Practice Game.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., Nov. 13 (Spl.).—The Alexandria High-Warrenton High game scheduled for Friday afternoon has been canceled by the Warrenton officials. A number of the Warrenton varsity performers were declared ineligible because of scholastic deficiency, and Warrenton was not able to place a formidable eleven on the field by Friday.

Faced with the prospect of his team going stale, with the important Fredericksburg game next on the schedule, Coach Givens has divided his squad into two elevens, one composed of the seniors and one of undergraduates. A regulation game will be played.

The lineups will be picked from the following men:

Seniors—Pullman, Saunders, Merchant, Fritter, Kirchner, McCewan, Jeffries, Luckett, Apperson, Beach, Burroughs, Ewald, Varney, Rhodes and Davis.

Undergraduates—Stewart, Nugent, Noble, O'Niel, Robinson, Whalen, Giedd, Bone, Shu, Fones, Burrell, Wordern and Hammersley.

Episcopal High School plays host to Shenandoah Valley Academy on Hoxton Field Saturday aftrenoon at 2:45 o'clock.

The squad came out of Saturday's battle with Virginia Episcopal in good shape, not a single casualty other than the usual sprains and bruises being reported.

Coach Cardwell sent the team through a series of offensive and defensive experiments today. Flick Hoxton and Al Wilson, stars of the back field, made a number of long runs and completed several forward and lateral passes for long gains.

Alexandria High basketeers held their second practice of the season today. More than 30 players are trying for the 10 varsity berths.

Veterans and promising candidates are; Shu, Hammersley, Nugent, Burrell, Brewer, Robinson, Ennis, Smith, McMenamin, Apperson, Lynch, Wood, Jacobson, Norford, Clinkscale and others.

Western High Tank Team Formed

Dorman Named Captain; 35 Candidates Hold Daily Drills.

FOR the first time in local scholastic sports history, Washington will be represented by two crack high school swimming teams this year. Central, long an established figure in the sport, faces the able rivalry of the up-and-coming natators of Western, now drilling daily at the Y. M. C. A. pool.

Close to 30 candidates are working out for the Central team under direction of Coach Fred Brunner at the high school pool. Coach Dallas Shirley, of Western, has only a slightly smaller squad battling for berths on the team, although this is only the second year the school has had a team.

Possibility of the schools competing in a dual meet are slim, however, due to difference in eligibility rules. Reports are correct of the suggested formation of an inter-high swimming league in which Eastern and Western would train at the Y. M. C. A. and Tech and Roosevelt at the Shoreham.

Dorman Named Captain.

Hamilton Dorman, a dash man who has been matching Jack Rait, ace of the squad, stroke for stroke over the 100-yard distance, was elected captain of the Western team yesterday. Ben Spiller was named manager.

Andy Moynelo and Dick Dorsey pack the backstroke talent. Lew Clay and Jim Bonham are two of the District's foremost breast-strokers and so are Forrest Harding and Bob Carney in the diving. Carney is junior indoor and outdoor champion of the District.

Coach Brunner is relying especially on Joe Kelly, fast-stroking dash man; Morris Goldberg, breast-stroker; Phil Fitzhugh and Ed Thatcher, back-strokers, and Bill Tarbett and Walt Shipley in the diving.

Amateur Field Trials Under Way in Virginia

Petersburg, Va., Nov. 13 (Spl.).—The Virginia amateur field trials are being held near this city and the attendance is large, widely separated sections of the country being represented. These trials have brought here an exceptionally fine lot of bird dogs. Silver cups will be awarded.

Ground Gainers.

St. Mary's, Nov. 13 (AP).—The Galloping Gaels boast two consistent ground gainers. They are Al Michelini, who in carrying the ball 70 times has eaten up 355 yards for an average of 5 yards a play, and Herb Schreiber, who has lugged the leather 58 times for 235 yards, good for an average of 4.3 per carry.

Harris Is Recalled As Nats' Manager

pated Griffith's choice of Harris, for whom he often had expressed admiration as a manager, although the Nats' owner until yesterday would give no inkling of his plans. It was known only that he preferred a bench-manager.

Both Griffith and Harris were elated at the contract-signing ceremonies at Griffith Stadium. Placing a paternal arm about the man whom he sent away from Washington six years ago, Griffith said:

"I'm glad to get Bucky back. I've never seen a better manager on the field and I'm sure he's the man we need. Bucky has the knack of getting the most out of his ball players, and I think he'll be happy here. I had a wide list of applicants to choose from, but I selected Bucky from what I know of him."

"Tickled Pink," He Says.

Harris beamed as he declared himself "tickled pink" to return to Washington.

"This is the greatest break I've had since 1924," he said. "It's really a thrill to know I'm coming back to Washington. There's something about coming back to your home town that makes a fellow want to dig in. I think I know what Griff wants and I'm going to try to give it to him."

Thus the 11-year managerial trail upon which Harris embarked in 1924, when Griffith confounded the baseball world by lifting his 27-year-old second baseman out of the ranks and naming him playing manager, leads back to Washington again for Bucky.

At the end of the 1928 season, after a five-year tenure here which saw him win two pennants, one world series, and never fail to finish in the first division, Harris was released by Griffith to Detroit, where he supplanted George Moriarty as manager.

Met With Reverses.

Detroit teams under Harris failed to finish better than fifth in any season, but when Tom Yawkey bought the Red Sox two years ago, bolstered the club with Lefty Grove and other purchases, and sought a manager for his expensive talent, he chose Harris, to whom he gave a one-year contract.

Pennant hopes that Boston fans had entertained virtually were blighted at the outset when Lefty Grove developed an ailing arm from which he never completely recovered. Despite the fact that Harris led the Red Sox to its first first-division berth in 16 years, he was released last month after the successful negotiations with the Nats for Joe Cronin.

Griffith was first attracted to Harris in 1919 when, on the recommendation of Scout Joe Engel, he was purchased from Albany as a second baseman for the reported price of $4,000. Griffith himself had scouted an infielder in the International League named Harris and was under the impression that it was an elder brother of Bucky's whom he had bought.

Played With Broken Finger.

Resigned to the error, Griffith watched Harris perform at Griffith Stadium at the tag end of the 1919 season and was alarmed when he observed Bucky make three wild throws to first base in his first game.

Then it was that he learned Harris was playing with a broken finger on which he had used no bandages in an effort to conceal his injury. Admiring the youngster's courage, Griffith commanded him to stay out of uniform until the injury had healed.

When Donie Bush was released after piloting the Nats into fourth place during the 1923 season, Griffith astounded baseball circles by naming the 27-year-old Harris as playing manager. "Griffith's folly," the move was described by baseball critics.

Led Club to Pennant.

And then Harris equally astounded the baseball world by leading the Washington Club to its first American League pennant in his first season at the helm. As playing manager, his performances on the field did not suffer. Rather, it improved. He became an integral part of the Peck-to-Harris-to-Judge double-play combination that set a new league record for twin killings, firing his line-up with the same dash and verve that he himself carried into every game.

The World Series of 1924 did not find him lacking. Pitted against the dedoubtable John McGraw, hailed as the greatest of baseball's master minds, Harris led the Nats to victory over the Giants in a seven-game series that set a new high mark for World Series thrills. The Nats went into the series with McGraw and the Giants a prohibitive favorite, but it was Harris' masterminding in the final game that went far toward deciding the issue.

It was on that occasion that he inserted Curly Ogden, a right-hander, to pitch to the first batter of the seventh game, thereby drawing all of McGraw's left-handed hitters into the line-up. Harris withdrew Ogden against the second Giant batter, substituting the left-handed George Mogridge and compelling McGraw to shift to right-handed hitters, thereby removing the dangerous Bill Terry from his line-up.

Proved His Resourcefulness.

The former breaker boy in Pennsylvania's coal mines proved his resourcefulness the following season when he again managed the Nats to the American League pennant. With his 1924 pitching staff decaying, Harris demonstrated his trading acumen by claiming the veterans, Stanley Coveleskie and Dutch Ruether, on waivers. He saw them justify his opinion that they were still capable pitchers. Coveleskie proved to be the league's leading pitcher of the season and with Ruether virtually pitched the Nats to the flag.

The world series of that year saw Harris encounter his first reverse—when the Pirates beat Washington in seven games. It was during that series that the reliable Roger Peckinpaugh set a series record of eight errors and contributed no little to the Nats' defeat.

Harris' Washington teams were never pennant contenders after that 1925 season, although they always finished in the first division. Then it was that Harris began to hear the boos and catcalls of fans whom the young manager had treated to two world series. With succeeding failures to win pennants, Harris lost much of his popularity here and when, at the end of the 1928 season, he was offered the managerial post at Detroit, Griffith gave him his release by no means reluctantly.

Yale Works Out.

New Haven, Nov. 13 (AP).—Yale will be represented by a squad of 27 players for the game with Princeton and this odd number worked out in the baseball cage today, running through a lengthy signal practice.

Notre Dame Works In Heavy Snow Storm

South Bend, Ind., Nov. 13 (AP). Even a blinding snowstorm failed to halt Notre Dame's workout for the Northwestern game today. Coach Elmer Layden sent his varsity through a long scrimmage to polish up a scoring punch and the regulars responded by scoring twice. The frosh scored on a pass and threatened the varsity goal on three other occasions.

G. U. Cagemen Schedule 20 Contests

Season Opens on Dec. 12; 30 Candidates Report at Initial Drill.

A 20-GAME SCHEDULE that will test the mettle of what is expected to be the school's most powerful basket ball team in recent years was announced yesterday by Gabe Murphy, director of athletics at Georgetown University. Ten of the contests are with Eastern Intercollegiate Conference opponents.

The Hoyas open on December 12 with Western Maryland at Tech High School, and wind up the campaign against the University of Maryland on March 11 at College Park.

One of the most difficult court cards ever listed for the Blue and Gray, the schedule is entirely devoid of "breathers." The team must start off in high gear and remain there throughout the season to enjoy a winning campagin.

30 at First Practice.

Coach Fred Mesmer called the first practice of the year yesterday and a squad of 30 responded. Many of those counted on will not report until after the football season, however.

Bill Connors, center, and Jack Crowley, forward, will be missing when the season opens, and Mesmer will have a difficult task filling their shoes. A number of promising courtmen from last season's freshman squad will bolster the team, however.

Yale, Army, Navy, New York U. and Manhattan are among the non-conference foes the Hilltoppers will meet.

The schedule:

December 12, Western Maryland; 14, *Bucknell (away); 15, *Carnegie Tech (away).
January 11, New York U. (away); 12, Manhattan (away); 14, *Temple (away); 16, Navy (away); 19, *Bucknell; 26, Carnegie Tech; 30, Army (away).
February 1, New York K. of C. (away); 8, New York U.; 11, *West Virginia; 20, *Temple; 23, *Pittsburgh.
March 1, Mount St. Mary's; 6, *Pittsburgh (away); 7, West Virginia (away); 11, Maryland.
*Eastern Intercollegiate Conference games.

Purchase William Baker; Dodgers Hope to Get V. Washington.

By George Kenney.

NEW YORK, Nov. 13 (Spl.).—While Uncle Charley Stoneham, owner of the New York Giants, has been tossing his money around like cigar coupons for star players to bolster his club for next year, his two New York rivals—Col. Jacob Ruppert of the Yankees, and Judge Steve McKeever, of the Brooklyn Dodgers—haven't been exactly asleep, it was learned today.

Ruppert, it was confessed, has bought—through his Newark International League subsidiary—a burly young backstop, William Baker, of Williamsport, in the New York-Penn League, and will pay Baker's freight to St. Petersburg, Fla., next spring.

McKeever hasn't been quite as successful in putting the rope on the prospects he has in mind, but he hopes that by the time the minor league meeting at Louisville, Ky., is concluded next week, he will have signed Vernon Washington, outfielder, now with Indianapolis.

To Leave This Week.

Bob Quinn, business manager of the Dodgers, will leave for Louisville at the end of this week with something akin to orders calling upon him to bring back Washington—or else.

Washington, according to the advance dope over which McKeever pondered happily today, is an outer gardener who will make the faithful of Flatbush forget that there ever were such fly chasers as Zach Wheat, Casey Stengel—now manager of the Dodgers—and the bold, batty Babe Herman. For one thing, McKeever learned, Washington hit .367 last year.

In piling up that average, Washington, who is a southpaw hitter but an orthodox thrower, accounted for 16 homers, 13 triples and 42 two-baggers—and McKeever's outer patrol force needs a fence buster in its ranks.

Baker, the new Yankee recruit, who may be allowed to gather experience at Newark should his spring showing indicate he needs further seasoning, batted .335 in 131 games, is a 6-footer and scales 190. He will be groomed to alternate with Arnie Jorgens as Bill Dickey's relief.

Home-Coming Planned.

Buckhannon, W. Va., Nov. 13 (Spl.).—Hundreds of alumni of West Virginia Wesleyan College are expected to come here Saturday for its annual home-coming event, which will take place Saturday, November 17.

V. M. I. Corrects Errors.

Lexington, Va., Nov. 13 (AP).—Two hours after their return from Baltimore the V. M. I. Cadets were on Alumni Field today working to correct errors that allowed Maryland to win the Armistice Day Monday battle by a decisive score.

Logan Named to Coach G. W. Varsity Quintet

ROLAND LOGAN, coach of the George Washington freshman basket ball team last season, has been appointed assistant varsity coach succeeding Ted O'Leary, university officials announced yesterday. He already has assumed his new duties.

Logan will act as assistant to Jim Pixlee, although virtually he will have complete charge of the dribblers since pressure of other duties prevents Pixlee from taking an active part in the work. Last season O'Leary directed the Colonials in one of their most successful campaigns.

Logan will introduce a new type of offense at the school this year, favoring the slower break and blocking plays. The old system of "rush and shoot" will not be abandoned entirely, but it will be secondary to the new style of play.

About a dozen men have been drilling three nights a week under Logan's direction and will continue this schedule until the conclusion of the football season. Capt. Bill Howell, Bill Noonan, Dallas Shirley, Henry Ruley, Calvin Griffith and Sammy Stein, of last year's varsity, and Ev Russell, Jake Goldfadden, Sammy Berg, Bill Wetzel, Walter Babum and Slim Whitley, of the '33 freshmen, are included in the group.

ROLAND LOGAN.

George Washington will not play its most important home games at the G street gym, but is negotiating for the use of a larger one. Whether it would be a high school gym could not be learned.

The Colonials will play a schedule of 20 games, including among their opponents St. John's, of Brooklyn; City College, of New York, and Villanova.

The schedule:

December 13, Shenandoah; 15, Randolph-Macon; 18, Geneva; 20, Wittenberg; 21, Indiana. January 4, Baltimore; 5, Drake; 7, Lynchburg; 9, C. C. N. Y.; 11, Elton; 18, Geneva (away); 30, Davis-Elkins. February 1, Villanova (away); 4, W. Va. (away); 8, Long Island (away); 9, St. John's of Brooklyn (away); 13, Wilson Teachers College; 16, Western Maryland; 21, Temple.

Stocks Decline Seven-Tenths In Active Sales

Heaviness of Utilities Chill Market; Trading Rises to 1,131,330 Sales.

New York, Nov. 13 (AP).—While financial markets were fairly active today, most of them were unable to move ahead with any degree of confidence.

Specialties were the favorites in stock trading, although the heaviness of utility equities tended to chill whatever enthusiasm may have been engendered by substantial advances in scattered shares.

The stock list was rather heavy at the finish, the Standard Statistics Co. average for 90 selected issues showing a decline of seven-tenths of a point at 73.3. The turnover aggregated 1,131,330 shares. This was the fourth session in about a month and a half in which more than 1,000,000 shares changed hands.

Pound Exhibits Strength.

The British pound exhibited strength against the dollar, while the leading European gold currencies sagged.

The softness of utility equities was attributed almost wholly to publication of the New York State Power Authority's report, which stated that investigation had disclosed power rates in this State were nearly twice as high as they should be. Although utility officials felt that the power authority's claims could be refuted, the possibility of rate cutting tended to give holders of these stocks something of a fright.

Consolidated Gas lost 2⅛ points at 24⅛. It was down to 23⅞ at one time, its lowest price in the past 10 years. The company's preferred issue dropped 4¼ to 85¼. United Gas Improvement also reached a new year's low with a decline of a major fraction. Others in this group, down fractions to around 2 points, included Public Service of New Jersey, Columbia Gas and North American.

Bright Spots in Market.

There were bright spots, however, in the market picture. Curtis Publishing preferred advanced 4 points and the common was up 1⅛. McKesson & Robbins preferred was up 2⅛ and new tops for the year were recorded by Briggs Manufacturing, Air Reduction and Congoleum with gains of fractions to around a point. The oils became quite lively, with Standards of New Jersey and California and Socony holding small advances.

The silver issues were quite firm early in the session when bar silver, imported for commercial use, was advanced 1⅛ cents an ounce to 55¾ cents, its highest price since 1929. The metal shares lost their gains later. Homestake Mining dropped 15 points.

American Telephone was off a point, New York Traction shares were down 1 to 2 and Texas Gulf Sulphur yielded 1. Johns-Manville and some of the other so-called building stocks were slightly higher as hopes continued to be entertained for the Government housing campaign. Douglas Aircraft and a few similar aviation issues were a bit firmer in response to better business prospects for the manufacturers.

Steel Preferred Up.

While U. S. Steel preferred got up 1⅛ points, other steel stocks failed to reflect the American Iron & Steel Institute's estimate that current production was at the rate of 27.3 per cent of capacity, as compared with 26.3 per cent a week ago.

McCrory Stores preferred lost 3½ points and some of the other merchandising shares yielded moderately to profit taking despite reports that Armistice Day retail sales were some 10 per cent ahead of those on the same day last year.

The Government's action in formally removing restrictions on capital exports of moderate amounts was cheering to banking circles and to those who yearn for dollar stabilization. Just how much of a market influence this step had was a matter of argument. Licenses for the movement of funds abroad have been freely granted for some time. The inflationists, though, were not particularly overjoyed by this indication that the Administration considers the dollar in a firm position.

Problem of Providing Loans for Small Industries Still Confronts United States; Review of Situation in Foreign Countries.

New York, November 13.—The problem of providing facilities for intermediate and longer terms loans to small enterprises, which generally do not have access to the security markets even in prosperous times, is not peculiar to this country. It has arisen in fact in all of the more developed industrial nations.

In Great Britain and France, the large commercial banks tend to restrict themselves to orthodox short-term commercial lending, and are reluctant to make advances for long periods which do not meet their tests of liquidity. Even in Germany, where until the banking crisis of 1931 a very close relationship existed between the banks and industry, there has been a definite need for special institutions to provide medium term loans to business enterprises.

The longer term credit needs of small enterprises in Great Britain was carefully studied several years ago by the committee on finance and industry, better known as the Macmillan committee. It reported to Parliament that "it has been represented that great difficulty is experienced by the smaller and medium sized businesses in raising the capital which they may from time to time require, even when the security offered is perfectly sound . . . The expense of public issue is to great in proportion to the capital raised, and therefore it is difficult to interest the ordinary investor by the usual method."

England's Industries Rely Upon Special Banks' Aid.

Until recently, the smaller industrial enterprises in Great Britain have had to rely almost entirely on the joint stock banks and private bankers for financial accommodation. Latterly, however, since the latter are unwilling or unable to extend medium and long-term credits, a number of special institutions have been established under the leadership of the Bank of England to fill the gap in the credit system of the country.

The Securities Management Trust, Ltd., was established under the auspices of the Bank of England for this purpose in 1929. This was followed in 1930 with the organization of the Bankers Industrial Development, Ltd. A third institution with the comprehensive title of Credit for Industry, Ltd. was set up in March of this year by the United Dominion Trust Co., Ltd., which is controlled by the Bank of England. These new credit companies, all financed with private capital, have furnished longer-term capital, but they have by no means solved the problem.

In France, the permanent capital of a business has traditionally been provided largely from the resources of the proprietors. Before the war, a group of investment banks or "banques d'affaires" granted medium and long-term credits, supplementing in this way the ordinary commercial banques or "banques de depots." Since the war, however, the commercial banks have entered the field of granting longer term credits by organizing subsidiaries for the purpose. Thus, in 1919, two of the largest "banques de depots," the Credit Lyonnais and the Comptoir National d'Escompte, organized the Union pour le Credit a l'Industrie Nationale, generally known as UCINA. Similarly, in 1928, a group of banks organized the Societe Anonyme de Credit a l'Industrie Francaise.

German Banks Accustomed To Aiding Its Industries.

In Germany, the situation has been different. The large commercial banks there have long engaged directly in providing medium and long-term capital to industry. The banking crisis of 1931 revealed the weaknesses of this type of combined commercial and investment banking, however, and steps have since been taken to restrict the commercial banks to short-term lending.

The burden of supplying medium and long-term credit to German business now rests largely on private banking houses which specialize in such loans, and on several government institutions which purchase direct participations in private enterprises. In addition, various cooperative associations, municipal savings banks and provincial banks made medium-term loans to small enterprises.

The industrial mortgage bank, lending on the security of mortgages on smaller enterprises, is found in Germany and a number of other continental countries. Several such institutions have the record of years of successful operation. However, the industrial mortgage idea is not suitable for broad application in the United States. Lines of credit granted by bank and trade creditors here would normally be curtailed sharply where concerns place mortgages on their assets, thus making the mortgage loan useless as a means of expanding available credit.

It is evident from the above brief survey of how this problem is being tackled in Europe that such longer term lending is being done there by institutions specially created for the purpose. This is designed to avoid freezing portfolios of commercial banks with nonliquid loans. A banking institution whose deposits are subject to withdrawal on demand or on short notice can hardly afford to place its funds in any substantial amount of loans which are neither liquid nor marketable.

Secondly, the special institutions granting longer term industrial and commercial credits should be financed through the sale of their own long-term securities, or from other funds not subject to withdrawal within short periods of time.

In the third place, best results are generally obtained by privately owned, rather than government, institutions. A subordination of business to political considerations tends to develop in government-owned institutions, and borrowers then tend to treat their debts too lightly.

Bonds Yield One-tenth in Smaller Sales

Rails and Utilities Turn Fairly Steady; Trading, $12,148,000.

New York, Nov. 13 (AP).—Price fluctuations generally were small and unimportant on the bond market today.

Prime railroads and utilities were fairly steady, secondary issues tended lower and United States Governments were mixed. A sharp drop in Polish loans was the feature of the foreign section.

Transfers aggregated $12,148,000, par value, compared with $12,599,000 on Friday, the last full five-hour session, and of this amount the turnover in United States Governments accounted for $3,010,000. The Standard Statistics Co. average for 60 domestic corporate loans declined one-tenth of a point, to 84.5.

High Grade Sales Small.

Although activity in high-grade corporation issues was small, prices were generally well maintained in all groups except a few, where there were special developments affecting them, notably the local utilities.

Consolidated Gas 4½s declined ⅝ of a point to 100⅜ following publication of a report by the State power authority holding that rates were too high. New York Edison 5s were ⅝ lower at 109½. Bonds of American Telephone, Canadian National Railways, Liggett & Myers, Public Service, Standard Oil of New York, Union Oil of California and West Penn Power, were slightly higher. Union Pacific rfg. 4s were ¼ lower at 101¼.

An easy tone developed among lower priced bonds in late trading after holding comparatively steady before noon. Baltimore & Ohio 4½s lost 1½ points to close at 52¼; St. Paul 4½ were 1⅜ lower at 57½, and New York Central 5s yielded 1½ at 62½.

On Losing List.

Others showing fractional losses included obligations of Paramount Publix, Portland Gas & Electric, Southern Pacific, Studebaker, Warner Bros. Pictures and Western Pacific. International Paper 6s were 1⅜ higher at 54⅜ and Sharon Steel Hoop 5½ picked up 1⅜ points at 68⅞.

United States Government were about evenly divided between small gains and losses, with Liberty 3½s three thirty-second seconds higher at 104.3 and Treasury 3⅜s of '40-43 two thirty-seconds lower at 102.24.

Irregularities Predominate In Curb Sales

Many Specialties Advance as Transfers Aggregate 184,000 Shares.

New York, Nov. 13 (AP).—Divergent trends prevailed on the curb market today. Utilities were under selling pressure, while on the other hand, many specialties staged rather wide advances. Trading was comparatively active.

Some of the oils were firmer in the late dealings, particularly Gulf and South Penn Oil. Alcohols ruled fairly steady, but metal issues more than yielded small forenoon gains.

In the specialty division, Singer Manufacturing initiated another spectacular upswing, rising 8 points to 270, a new high for the year. Merchandising shares, including Montgomery Ward A and Neisner Brothers preferred, were sharply higher. Aluminum Company of America, Pan American Airways and Ruberoid Co. were other firm spots.

Among the power shares, American Gas & Electric dipped a point to a new low for the year, while Electric Bond & Share equaled its year's low on a similar decline. Losses of a point or more were recorded by United Power & Light convertible preferred, Consolidated Gas of Baltimore, Lake Shore Mines, Pacific Tin (special) and United Gas preferred.

Transfers which approximated 184,000 shares, were about the same as last Friday's total.

Foreign Silver Prices Up 1⅞ to 55¾ Cents

New York, Nov. 13 (AP).—The price of foreign bar silver for domestic industrial use today was boosted 1⅞ cents to 55¾ cents an ounce, which established the highest level since 1929.

A sharp advance in the white metal in the London market yesterday was regarded as the primary factor in the rise here. The upswing in London was attributed in part to buying for the account of the U. S. Treasury, which was also the cause of speculative activity and a substantial rise in silver futures prices on the Canadian markets.

London—Under pressure of unemployed money giltedged securities continued to rise on the stock exchange in the morning, but profit-taking later caused irregularity, with many stocks closing lower for the day. The reaction occurred after consols had touched £80 and the 3½ per cent war loan a new high record of £107. Kaffirs rallied after weakness caused by cape selling, while home rails and German bonds declined. Other sections were uncertain, and the market closed irregular.

Paris—With the outlook favorable for the success of Premier Flandin's cabinet, rentes continued to climb on the bourse today. Citroen and Michelin issues declined along with electric stocks. The closing was irregular.

Berlin—Traders on the boerse showed a greater interest in German dollar bonds today owing to the supreme court's decision that the Krupp and Hanover Provincial Bank must pay interest and redeem dollar loans at their undervaluated rate. Business in other issues was very small. The closing was unchanged.

Wheat's Value Is Unchanged; Corn Jumps

Cotton Turns Irregular and Closes on Slightly Lower Level.

Chicago, Nov. 13 (AP).—Speculators clung to the sidelines in the grain market today until a sharp advance of around two cents a bushel in corn futures during the final half hour of trading touched off a moderate buying wave that carried other major grains to fractional gains.

Wheat prices sank lower during the early dwindling trade, but business in this commodity was spirited out of lethargy just before the final bell by a mildly sensational spurt of corn values to the highest level of the season for December and July deliveries.

Strength in the latter market according to observers was due more to the absence of selling pressure than to an increase in buying power, but many traders heeded advices that the need for feedstuffs would be great. Commission houses bought, prompting short sellers to cover and disclosing fundamental strength in the market.

At the close corn was 1½ to 2¼ cents higher than final prices Saturday, May, at 83¼-83⅜, the day's top price. December new corn finished at 81½-81⅝. Wheat closed unchanged to ⅛ cent higher, May, at 99½-99⅝, after touching a low 1½ cent below this figure. Oats and rye gained fractions.

Cotton Market

New York, Nov. 13 (AP).—Cotton fluctuated irregularly within a range of 8 to 12 points today and finished a shade lower. March contracts, after selling up to 12.53, declined to 12.41 and closed at 12.44, with the general market ending steady, net unchanged to 3 points lower.

Prices held fairly steady during the early trading on trade buying of near months and the demand from abroad. The latter tapered off after the close of Liverpool, while December liquidation continued in considerable volume and some selling came through houses with Japanese connections.

The report of the New York Cotton Exchange Service, placing domestic consumption at 525,000 bales, against 296,000 for September and 504,000 for October last year, attracted little attention.

Exports today, 14,132, making 1,611,251 so far this season. Port receipts, 24,530. U. S. port stocks, 3,155,111.

Garnett Raps County Sewer Project Curb

Arlington Board Member Demands Fair Distribution of Fund.

ARLINGTON COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST.
Tel. Clar. 509. Clarendon, Va.

Christopher B. Garnett, member of the county board, told more than 50 citizens in the John Marshall Schoolhouse last night that there will not be more than 115 miles of trunk and lateral line sewers laid in Arlington County. The board promised that the system would provide 113 miles of trunk and 200 miles of lateral lines.

From a booklet published by the board October 31, 1933, he read:

"The system proposed, and as now being designed, and on which a loan of $2,500,000 has been approved by the Federal Government, will mean the construction of 113 miles of trunk lines and almost 200 miles of lateral lines when finally completed."

"To begin with," he said, "I was not a member of the board when this sewer program which promised a county-wide system was planned. I feel that those responsible for the plan were too enthusiastic and the estimates far too low. Mentioning one item—that of the Potomac river interceptor from Chain Bridge to Rosslyn—it was first estimated to cost about $60,000. It was later raised to $100,000. After an investigation I am saying it could not be constructed for less than $500,000 and have been advised by the engineers in charge of the work that it would cost more than $750,000 to construct. It will not be built.

"By not having the Potomac river interceptor built, this section, comprising Country Club Hills, Golf Club Manor and Livingstone Heights, is practically left out of the system."

Mr. Garnett said the board already has awarded 12 contracts and that five more will be awarded at the meeting Wednesday, leaving but two more except construction of the disposal plant at Four-Mile Run.

Asked why the system will not be installed as outlined, Mr. Garnett replied one reason is that the revolving fund for lateral lines has been made $1,000,000 instead of $500,000, and that the system was under-estimated at the beginning.

"The only thing I see that the citizens in this section can now do is to organize into one active organization, the purpose for which this meeting was called, and to make a demand for a fair distribution of the revolving fund for lateral lines," he concluded.

A special committee, consisting of Mr. Garnett, Joseph Mason and P. T. Williams, was appointed to form organization plans and report December 1.

Declaring that County Manager Roy S. Braden has given Arlington efficient service, the Jefferson Civic League last night adopted a resolution "severely condemning" the action of B. M. Smith and C. B. Garnett, county board members, in offering a motion early this month to remove him from office.

The resolution recalled that Braden discovered extensive defalcations in county funds and is carrying out the greatest building program the county ever has attempted. The resolution also pointed out that neither Garnett nor Smith was elected by the people, but by an official.

With a third member appointed to the five-member board, placing the elected members in the minority, the league urges that the newest member—W. E. A. McShea—vote against any request for Braden's resignation.

Clyde M. Mills was elected president for the new year. Other officers are Mrs. W. E. Pitts, first vice president; A. Dexter Davis, second vice president; Frank Townsend Tracy, treasurer, and Miss Ruth Richart, secretary.

The Parent-Teacher Association of the John Marshall School yesterday completed plans to serve hot lunches to pupils during the winter. The committee consists of Mrs. G. F. Freer, chairman; Mrs. John A. Petty, Mrs. V. Hart and Mrs. John Dunaway.

The Rev. Walter Wolf, pastor of Arlington Presbyterian Church, addressed the meeting on the value of week-day religious education and urged that the association approve giving such instruction in the school. Miss Margaret Troxell advocated establishment of a school orchestra.

The county board yesterday received bids for the installation of sewers as follows: Cherrydale and community, low bid of $146,465, by DeLashmutt Bhothers, Arlington County; Bon Air and Glencarlyn section, low bid of $30,949.75 by J. B. McCrary, of Atlanta; completion of Four-Mile Run trunk line to Falls Church, low bid of $112,541.50 by J. A. LaPorte, Inc., of New York; County Club Hills section, low bid of $46,228.65 by J. B. McCrary Co., of Atlanta, and Arlington Ridge and Oak Crest, low bid of $47,398 by Rose & Reddick, Inc., of Washington. Contracts will be awarded today.

The Ladies Auxiliary of the Clarendon Volunteer Fire Department will sponsor a benefit bingo and card party tomorrow night at the home of Mrs. Carrie Gibson, 121 Ellerson avenue, Clarendon.

Noble Rushe Quits Fire Job At Hyattsville

Won't Stand for Reelection; Ernest Davis Named His Successor.

Noble Rushe, for eight years chief of the Hyattsville Fire Department and leader of that organization during its celebrated fight against the town council, is not a candidate for reelection. During the annual nominations, held Monday night, Ernest Davis, second in command, was selected to succeed Rushe.

Rushe, who was elected last June to the presidency of the State Firemen's Association, said last night the duties of his latest office would prevent him from assuming again leadership of the Hyattsville department.

He was returned home Monday from Casualty Hospital, where he had undergone an operation for appendicitis. The operation took place as he was recuperating from another and more protracted illness.

Under Chief Rushe the department, in 1932, gained notice in newspapers when the members refused to be ousted by the Hyattsville town council.

The firemen made their living quarters in the department headquarters and for several weeks defied the council to throw them out or take possession of the equipment. The argument arose over the ownership of the equipment.

Assistant Chief Davis has been an officer in the department five years. He has been a lieutenant and a captain. Other officers nominated Monday night include:

For assistant chief, Alfred Degges; captain, James Smith; lieutenant, Earl Dorrelle; fire marshal, Howard Holmes; secretary, Charles Trott; superintendent of machinery, Harry Wilcoxen, and treasurer, John Fainter.

Delegates selected for the county Volunteer Firemen's Association are Davis and Trott, with Holmes and Wayne Proctor as alternates.

It was also announced at the Monday night meeting that the ladies auxiliary would hold a bingo party Friday night. Plans were also made to hold a turkey raffle Christmas. Following an annual custom, the department will sponsor a community Christmas tree and will repair toys for children of the town.

Wages Are Paid After 34 Years

Houseworker's Suit Off After Settlement in Maryland.

Mrs. Anne Gertrude Warner, of Detour, Md., finally has been paid for the 34 years of housework she did for the late William A. Mort, of Thurmont, Md.

Mrs. Warner had brought suit for $20,000 against Dr. Morris A. Birely, of Thurmont, executor of the Mort estate. The case was scheduled for trial before a circuit court jury in Frederick, Md., yesterday, when a settlement out of court was announced. Her claim was for services rendered.

Mrs. Warner, alleging she began working for the Mort family at the age of 10 at a wage of 50 cents per week and had performed household duties for almost three and a half decades, claimed that at one time a joint bank account of $27,204 existed in the name of Mr. Mort and herself. At his death she received nothing.

The case was first tried before a jury last April. After deliberating seven hours, the jurors disagreed and were discharged. The case was marked for retrial. Settlement terms were not disclosed.

PWA Approves Plans For Laurel Fire House

Authority to complete negotiations for a $7,900 PWA loan to construct a new fire house in Laurel, Md., was voted to Ogle Marbury, city solicitor, at a special meeting of the mayor and city council last night.

Approval of the application, which was filed nearly a year ago, was received Friday. Plans approved by PWA officials call for construction of a new building on the site of the present fire house.

Falls Church Council Sets Tax Increase

New Budget Requires Assessment Boost of 15 Cents.

FAIRFAX BUREAU OF THE POST.
P. O. Box 246, Fairfax, Va.
Phone Clar. 126-J.

A budget of $29,569.13 for the fiscal year, effective September 1, 1934, was set up last night by the Falls Church town council. This budget will necessitate a 15 cent increase in the local tax levy, which is increased from $1.45 to $1.60 per $100 valuation. The increase, according to the mayor, is due to litigation expenses resulting from a suit brought by citizens of East Falls Church for a separation, and to the need of additional road building and street repairs. Of the $1.60, 35 cents will be used for interest and sinking fund for the school bonds, 10 cents for fire protection and $1.15 for town expenses.

The estimated budget income as listed last night by Thomas Probey, chairman of the finance committee, shows a balance on hand of $2,404.20 September 1. Taxes for 1934-35, as assessed, should produce $23,182.18, including $16,662.87 for regular expenses, $5,070.31 for school bonds and $1,449.18 for fire protection, it was stated. As experience shows not all taxes will be paid, the committee estimated receipts at $18,777.72, or $13,496.93 from the $1.15 levy, $4,106.95 for school bonds and $1,173.84 for fire protection. Delinquent taxes are expected to bring in $4,000, fines, permits, etc., $2,500, and miscellaneous taxes an additional $1,200.

Budget expenses list $2,000 for school bond retirement and $3,196 for interest, $4,000 for school operating expenses; $4,453.80 for water department loans, and $350 additional for interest; from the fire tax $544.38 was allocated to the water department, $250.92 being the balance still due for 1933-34; street lights will cost $1,300; town library, $240; fire department, $880.38; shade trees, $100; salaries, $2,400; roads, $4,000; relief, $1,000, and contingent and miscellaneous, $5,104.57.

The committee recommended that the money allocated for relief be spent in salaries for men doing road work and other town jobs.

The council unanimously adopted a zoning ordinance for the town under consideration for the past two years. This ordinance, prepared jointly by the council and by the zoning and building committee appointed last year by Judge Walter McCarthy, W. T. Westcott, Phillip Talbott and C. V. Shreve, set up two classes of districts within the corporation, residential and business limits, defines what may be included in either district, provides for enforcement and for a board of zoning appeals of five members, with their duties and powers, and makes violation of the ordinance a misdemeanor.

Buildings or premises now in use which do not conform to the terms of the ordinance may be continued in use, but may not later be enlarged unless made to conform with the ordinance. A map of the town with the property differentiated between residential and business was made part of the ordinance.

The first building permit to be issued by the council after the adoption of the ordinance, which was declared effective on passage, was to O. C. Pearson for alterations to the Byrne residence on Washington and Jefferson streets. He will establish a funeral parlor and mortuary chapel.

Mayor L. P. School Bonds Will Be Issued In Alexandria

Council Votes $228,000 Block to Repay Loan From PWA.

THE WASHINGTON POST BUREAU.
907 Prince St., Alexandria, Va.
Phone Alexandria 523.

The city council last night formally approved the issuance of $228,000 bonds for construction of the new high school building, to cover a loan of $300,000 from the Public Works Administration for this purpose. The bonds will bear 4 per cent interest.

The total cost of the building will be in excess of $300,000, but an additional loan of $60,000 has been negotiated, and a substantial part of both loans will be in the nature of an outright grant, the bonds being for the difference between the loan and the grant.

Appropriations were approved covering $2,000 for construction of sidewalks; $275 for purchasing material for protecting the windows of the old silk mill property, purchased by the city for a colored school; $275 for constructing a sidewalk from the present sidewalk on Simms street to Nash avenue, at Chapman street, with a wooden bridge over Hooffs Run, and $350 for grading the extension of Carroll avenue and Oxford avenue.

Councilman Cooper's request for rezoning of DeWitt avenue to permit the construction of apartment houses and two-family houses, was approved, and a resolution appropriating $4,500 for construction of a sewer on DeWitt avenue was introduced and held over under the rules. It is proposed, Cooper said, to construct five 8-apartment houses and three 2-family houses, as the inauguration of a considerable building program. The estimated return from the sewer project would be approximately $3,600 for tapping, he added.

A request of the Sixth Ward Citizens Association that a portion of DeWitt avenue be roped off in the evenings for roller skating by children was denied, and the association will be requested to take the matter up with the city manager with a view to designating a place for skating which will meet with the approval of residents and property owners.

A tuberculosis clinic will be held in Alexandria by a specialist from the State Department of Health on Friday under auspices of the city health department, and with the cooperation of the physicians of the city.

It is announced that if any treatment is found necessary it must be directed by the family physician, under whose care and advice the patients must ordinarily remain. For this reason, it is necessary for those wishing examination, which is free of cost, to consult their family physician, or the visiting nurse, and make an appointment. A signed request from the family physician must be presented.

Children under 15 years of age will not be examined at this clinic unless especially sent by a physician, since, it is stated, it has long been recognized that tuberculosis in children can not be found without a special examination in which the tuberculin test and the X-ray are used.

The Interdenominational Mission to Lepers in Alexandria has forwarded to Dr. William N. Danner, general secretary of the American mission, $25 in money, and a number of useful articles, such as scarfs, eyeglasses and bandages. The money was sent through Miss Mary Williamson, treasurer of the organization, and brings the contributions for the year to $100.

Several business firms have given the mission permission to place in their stores small banks for receiving contributions to this cause.

The board of tax equalization recently named by Judge William P. Woolls, of the Alexandria Corporation Court, has been organized with the election of Thomas J. Fannon as chairman, and Allan B. Prosise as secretary. The other member of the board is Joseph S. Blackwell. Elliott F. Hoffman has been elected clerk.

The first meeting of the board will be held at 7:30 p. m., November 23, in the office of the commissioner of revenue in the city hall building. It is planned to hold meetings each Monday, Wednesday and Friday thereafter at 7:30 p. m., until all persons having complaints as to the new tax assessment have been heard. Property owners having claims of inequalities in their assessments have been invited to appear before the board.

Pro Bono Publico, Constant Reader and Taxpayer glared fiercely at the editor, who, surrounded by manuscripts, paste-pots and reference books, faced them bravely.

"Your newspaper," thundered Pro Bono, "is too . . too danged frivolous, with editorials about steamboat whistles and the funny sayings of this fellow H. I. Phillips! I won't——"

Constant Reader's jaw dropped with surprise. "Too frivolous?" he demanded. "Huh, I came up here to tell him it was too serious, talking about sewage plants and naval treaties and literary prizes!"

Taxpayer sighed weakly. "Well," he said, "I think——"

The door opened and Old Subscriber tottered in. He surveyed the group calmly, filled his pipe with shag tobacco, and struck a match on the editor's typewriter.

"Man and boy," he wheezed, "I've been reading your newspaper for forty years, an' Mirandy (that's the Missus) an' me think that it ain't ever been as good as it is right now. You give the ins and the outs just what's comin' to 'em, and you're putting out a right fine newspaper. Why, Mirandy says The Washington Post is the only newspaper she ever heard tell of what could show her a new way to cook eggs, an', 'course I ain't throwed a ball for nigh onto twenty years, but I shore like that feller Povich who writes sports. An' that man Elderman, why, the day ain't started right fer me if I don't see his drawin' on the editorial page. Yessir, you're doin' a right smart job."

Of course, gentle reader, Pro Bono Publico and his friends don't always come down here to The Post to tell us these things . . they write letters instead. In fact, we get so many letters that we're beginning to suspect that the "Letters to the Editor" idea was started by some Postmaster General with the idea of wiping out the postal deficit, but we welcome them. We think that "Letters to the Editor," written by Post readers on a variety of subjects ranging from the starling menace to disarmament, is one of the brightest spots of the paper. These letters . . . intelligent . . . timely . . . provocative . . . are a true cross-section of public opinion.

The Post publishes the brickbats along with the bouquets, and if a citizen has something to say, he doesn't need a soap-box. A pen and paper will open this Forum to him, and it's better than writing a letter to his Congressman.

"Letters to the Editor," bearing the signatures of our friends, Pro Bono Publico, Old Subscriber and Constant Reader, can be found on the editorial page of The Washington Post each morning, and after you have studied the editorial and chuckled over 'Gene Elderman's brilliant cartoon, we recommend that you read "Letters to the Editor" and find out what the Man in the Street thinks about this sad, worried world of ours.

Price Changes Put Under Hitler Curb

Berlin, Nov. 13 (AP).—Changes in the prices of any commodity or article in Germany was made subject today to the approval of Dr. Karl Goerdeler, Reichsfuehrer Hitler's commissioner for control of prices.

The decree making Goerdeler final arbiter of prices in Germany empowers him to take "drastic measures" against middlemen and others who attempt to evade his rulings.

To prevent price increases, the formation of trading companies with an "intermediate character" also was made illegal without the price commissioner's approval.

Walt Mason Himself

The Appointed Time.

This is the time when candidates may spring fantastic schemes; the country's full of mournful skates who'll fall for hophead dreams. Now anything that's queer and strange will soothe the voter's fears, and anything that hints of change will draw three rousing cheers. "Things can't be worse," the voter sighs, "and Johnson's bughouse plan may prove a big and glad surprise, a boon to mourning man. He tells us if he wins the race our debts will all be paid, the mortgage now upon my place will shortly be mislaid. We all shall live in Easy street and flourish high and wide, and have the finest things to eat the market can provide. We'll all be garbed in rich attire and frequent fine hotels, and everything we may desire will come along with bells. In olden times I would have smiled at all that sort of tosh, the voters wouldn't be beguiled by bunk that wouldn't wash. But now we're in a frame of mind that welcomes any rot for fortune has been so unkind our hearts are sore and hot. So when the candidate appears with his nice fairy tale, we lend him most attentive ears, and hope he will not fail." The would-be statesman springs his scheme, impossible and vain, and eyes of voters flash and gleam, they think his project sane. His glowing projects they rehearse and murmur as they prance, "We know that things can't well be worse, so why not take a chance?"

Aid to Jobless Aim of Parley Opening Today

Unemployment Insurance, Child Welfare First on Program.

Means of saving millions of unemployed from bread lines will be discussed here today at a conference of social, labor and industrial leaders.

A program of social legislation will be considered at the meeting, called by the President's committee on economic security. In addition to the jobless issue the conference will study unemployment insurance, old age security, child welfare and medical care for the needy.

Ideas approved by the conference will be submitted to a Cabinet committee headed by Secretary Perkins, and to a recently named advisory council directed by Frank P. Graham, University of North Carolina president.

Miss Perkins said her committee would seek to recommend a well-rounded program of social legislation to President Roosevelt by December 1. She said two additional weeks might be required to complete the job.

2-Point Program.

The conferees, Miss Perkins said, will approach the unemployment problem from two directions—assurance of employment and insurance for unemployed. She emphasized the need for long range planning to prevent periodic drops in employment, and facilities to care for the idle until they can find work.

Those to head a series of round-table conferences today include: Unemployment insurance, Joseph H. Willetts, of the University of Pennsylvania; old age security, Miss Mary Dawson, of the National Consumers League; child welfare, Miss Grace Abbott, of the University of Chicago; employment, William Haber, director of the Michigan Welfare Relief Commission, and medical care, Dr. Livingston Farrand, president of Cornell University.

Members of the economic security committee, in addition to Miss Perkins, include Secretary Morgenthau, Attorney General Cummings, Secretary Wallace and Harry L. Hopkins, Federal emergency relief administrator.

30,000 Reds Captured By Cantonese Troops

RED GRANGE SCORED 4 TOUCHDOWNS IN 12 MINUTES AGAINST MICHIGAN IN 1924...
THE MOST DELICATE PERFUMES HAVE FOUL SMELLING BASES...

William the Conqueror, who conquered England in the eleventh century and who changed the course of the world's history with his victory at the Battle of Hastings, was owner of all England after he put down the revolts against his rule. The land at first was confiscated from nobles who opposed him, and later when his place was secure he confiscated land regardless of who owned it, and divided it up into baronies for his followers and supporters to use. The land, however, still belonged to him.

He was the first Norman king of England, crossing the channel in 1066 to invade England on the claim that he was the rightful sovereign, a pretext based on several grounds. The Anglo-Saxon king, Harold, was overthrown and William became king. Prior to that time he was the ruler of Normandy by right of inheritance from his father, Duke Robert II.

William, although he was a conqueror, is credited by historians with paving the way for England's present greatness. George V, present King of England, traces his ancestry back to William the Conqueror.

Strange as it seems, the substances which form the base for some of the most delicate perfumes are themselves vile smelling. Chief among the more expensive and widely used in high grade perfumes are ambergris, musk, and civet. Ambergris is a secretion of sick whales, musk comes from musk deer, and civet from civet-cats, close kin of the ordinary skunk.

Exiled Mexican Prelate Denies Inciting Revolt

San Antonio, Tex., Nov. 13 (AP).—Archbishop Leopoldo Ruiz y Flores, exiled papal delegate to Mexico, said today he would return to that country to answer charges of inciting a rebellion if the Mexican government would assure him a fair trial.

The archbishop denied that a recent communications in which he protested the Mexican government's policies toward the clergy was meant to arouse the people against the government.

Hutchins Takes Witness Stand For Insull's Son

Prosecutor Grills Scheel, Groups' Market Expert, on Activities.

Chicago, Nov. 13 (AP).—Robert Maynard Hutchins, young president of the University of Chicago, and Silas Strawn, former president of the American Bar Association, today momentarily halted a spirited battle in the Insull mail fraud trial over stock market "rigging."

The tall young educator spoke for Samuel Insull, jr., son of the Chicago utilities executive who is the central figure of the hundred million dollar case.

Strawn, spoke in bahlf of Attorney Waldo F. Tobey, a codefendant with Insull and 15 others. Both Hutchins and Strawn were character witnesses.

Then Prosecutor Leslie E. Salter came to grips with Fred A. Scheel, stock market expert of the Insull staff, seeking an admission that Insull stock was kept at inflated prices to attract buyers.

Scheel admitted he received fat bonuses for handling securities of the Insull utility system, getting a bonus of $72,000 in 1930, along with a salary of $27,000, and one of $35,000 the next year. Earlier, however, he told the jury he sank his entire personal fortune in Insull stock, losing $900,000 in 1929 on a "tip" direct from Insull himself.

He recouped $80,000 of this in 1931, he admitted, by selling stock at a profit of that size.

"Did you have any inside information that caused you to sell at that time?" asked Salter.

"I did not," said Scheel.
